USDA praised and criticized

By DIETER KRIEG

LITITZ, Pa. - USDA policies were praised and scorned last week when this writer asked a number of farmers how they felt about U.S. agricultural policies at home and abroad.

A sizable segment of the farm population gave USDA favorable marks, others gave it a mere passing grade, while a few said they hope to see significant changes soon.

W. Max Bossert of Beech Creek R1 in Clinton County is of the opinion that USDA policies for the past several years have been favorable for farmers–large or small. A former state legislator, Bossert farms 200 acres and keeps 40 head of beef cattle. He commented that the Ford Administration has done a "terrific job in every department, especially agriculture." His main reason is free enterprise.

Kenneth Mummert, Chambersburg R2, owns 125 acres in Franklin County and rents an additional 125. "I don't think agriculture has been in as good a position before as it has in the last eight years in relation to the Policy debate highlights annual banquet

By JOYCE BUPP
York County Reporter

DOVER, Pa. - Spirited policy debate and voting were highlights of the recent annual banquet held by the York County Farmers Association.

Dover Fire Hall hosted the meeting, attended by 175 of the Association's farm family members, on October 7.

The policy session, chaired by Association Vice-President Roger Perry, determined issues which the county board will recommend to the Pennsylvania Farmers Association at its upcoming state-wide annual meeting in Gettysburg, November 9-11.

Overwhelmingly adopted was the recommendation that public utilities be forbidden to bill retroactively. Another widely supported directive was that Congress review on a bi-annual basis regulatory agencies, such as OSHA and DER, to determine their usefulness and responsiveness.

Import laws came under fire with the membership voting that "free ports," a loop-hole through which Australian beef is entering this country without duty, be eliminated. Dairy farm

Young Farmers discuss ag outlook

By SALLY BAIR

NEW HOLLAND, Pa. - Dairymen can look forward to another year of Class I prices averaging over $11; the worst is over as far as livestock prices are concerned; and there will be no upward trend in the hog market for several months.

The picture for grains is still fuzzy, but with the harvest drawing to a close there is evidence that higher corn prices than previously expected will prevail.

These were a few of the predictions put before members of the Garden Spot Young Farmers Association at their agricultural outlook meeting this week.

Firm predictions were hard to come by, but panelists representing dairy, livestock, grains and a local brokerage firm all tried to give accurate assessments of the factors affecting their spheres of interest.

The brightest story came from Jim Sumner, representing Inter-State Milk Producers Cooperative. Calling 1976 one of the "more successful years in the dairy industry," he predicted that 1977 will be just as good.

Edwin D. Eshleman honored at banquet

By JOANNE SPAHR

INTERCOURSE, Pa. - "You're a lobby group, but lobbying is not a dirty word," Congressman Edwin D. Eshleman told a group of Lancaster County Farmers' Association members at their annual banquet, here, last week. Eshleman, who is retiring from office after 22 years of serving the public, also made it clear to those present that their political tactics are exemplary of good pressure group tactics.

"If the public would sit in on our meetings, they would find out what lobbying really is,' he emphasized.

This brief speech came after the Association presented him with a wall clock for his many years of service.

Helen Wivell, state women's committee, later recognized Mrs. Eshleman's efforts through the years

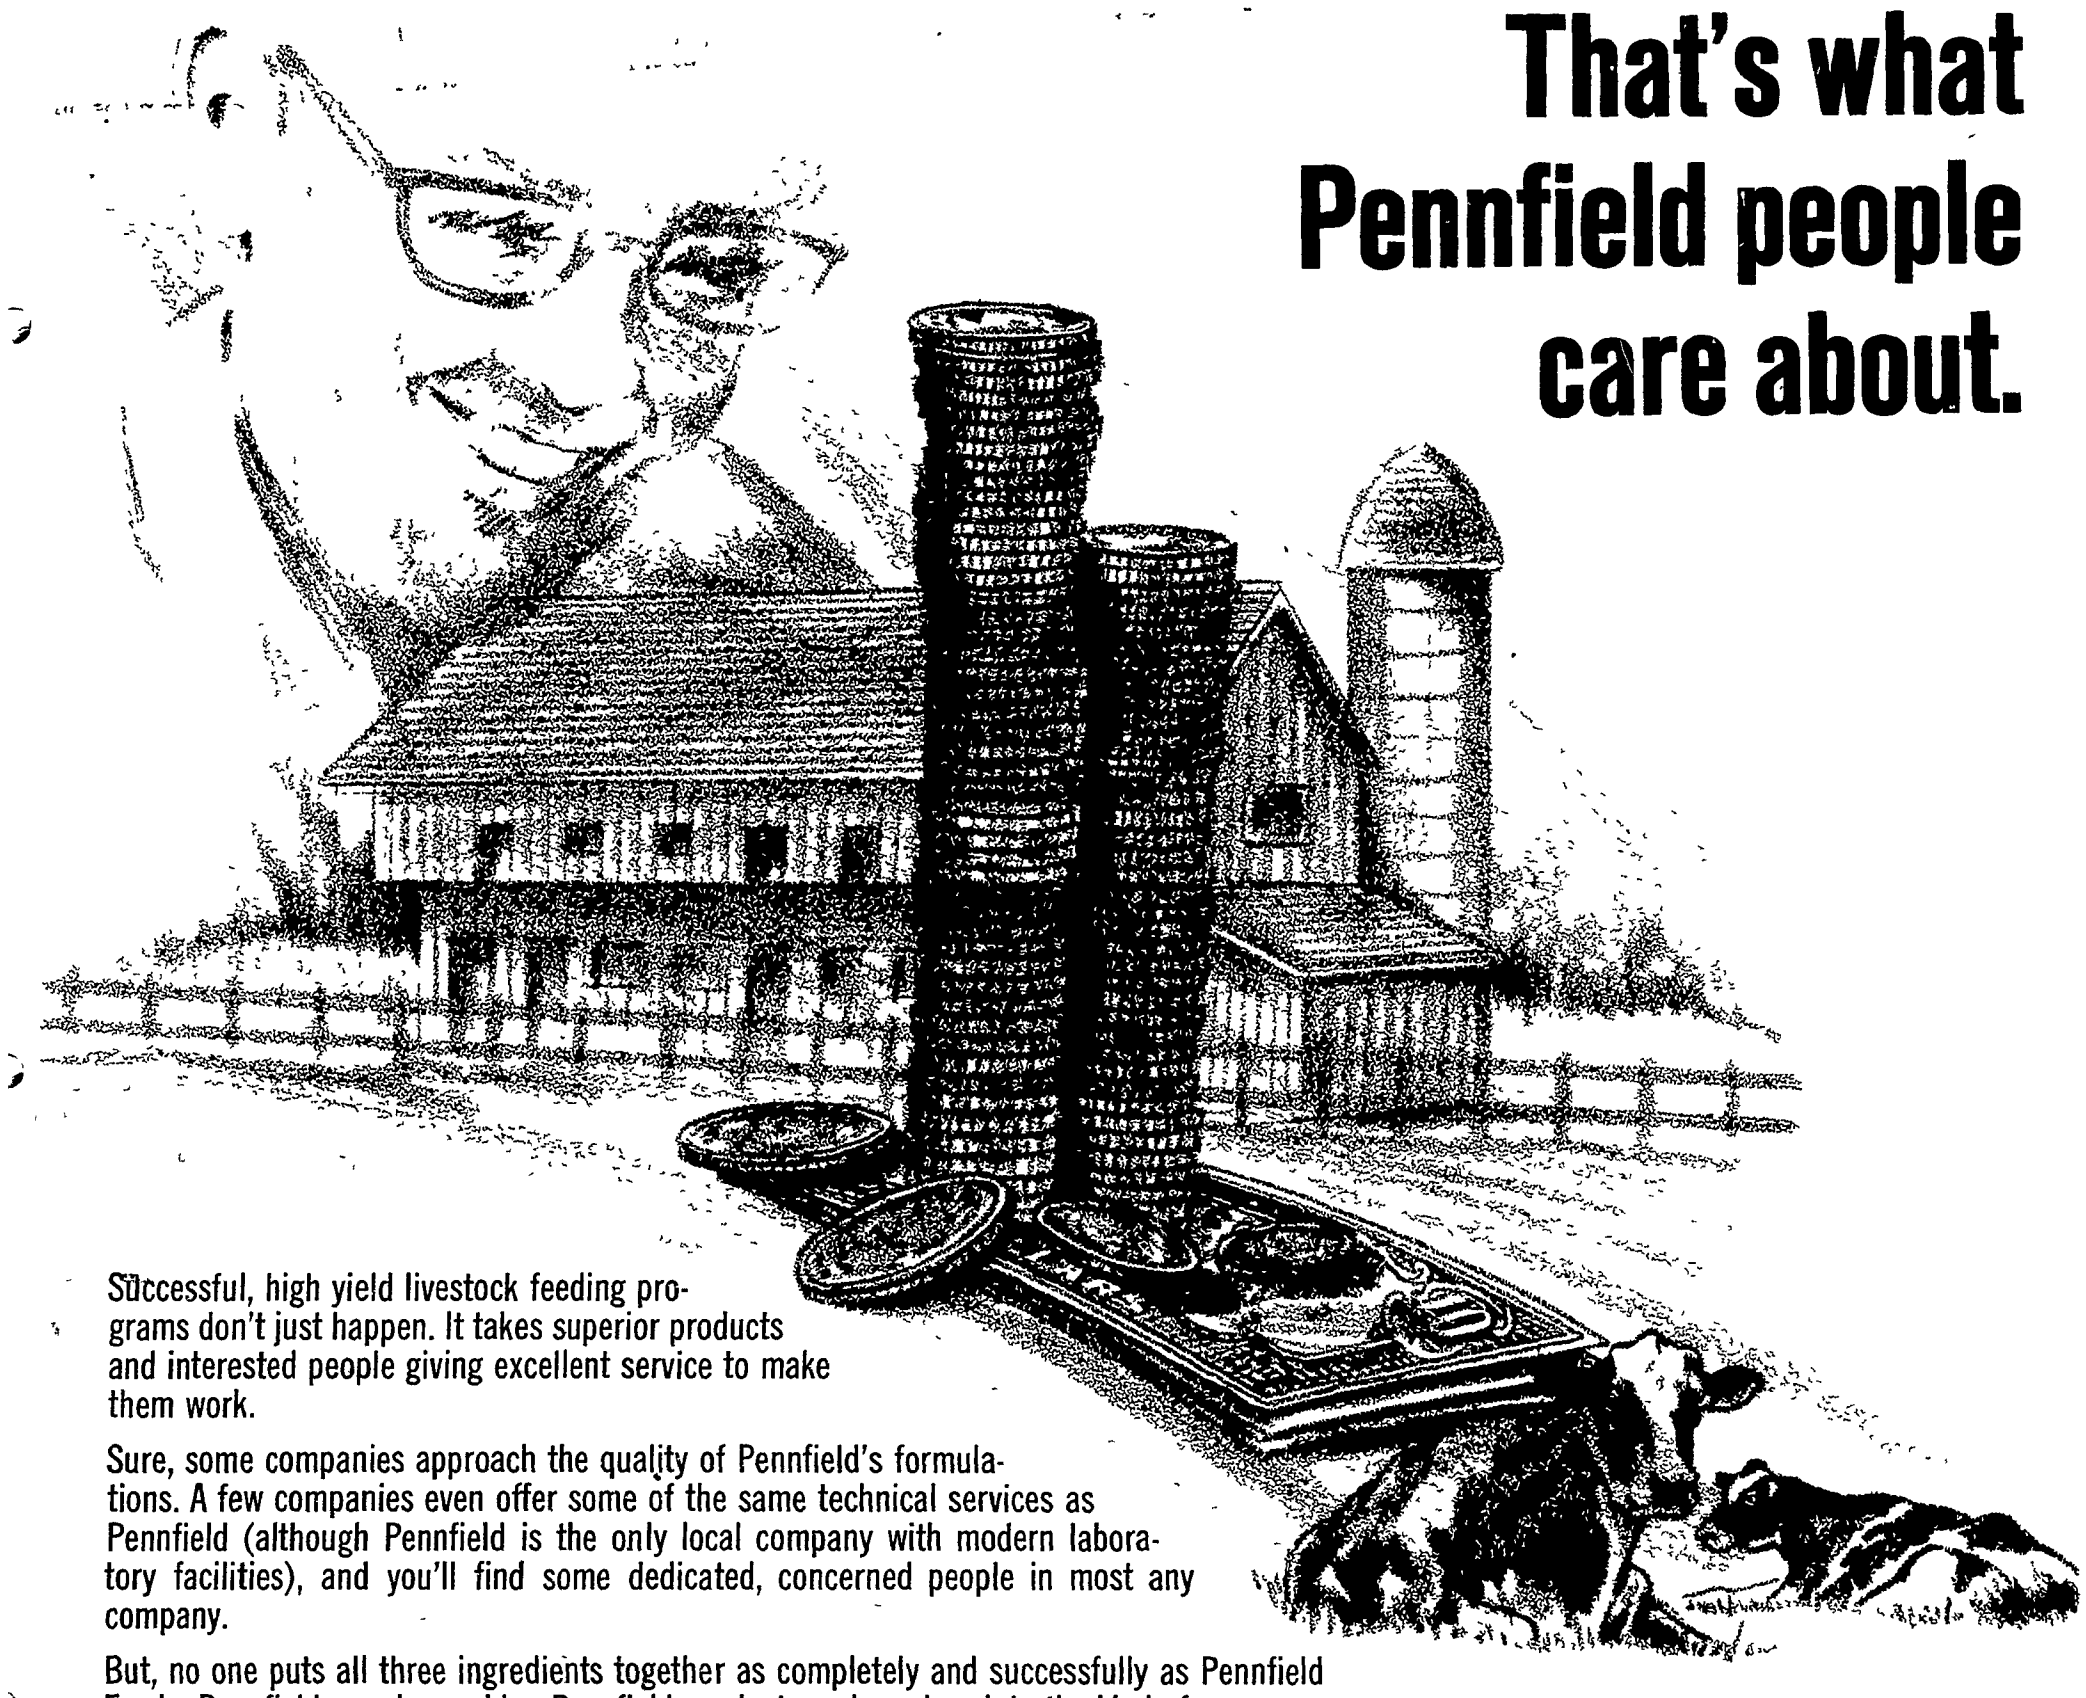
We'd like the privilege of helping you decide which DEKALB leghorn is best fitted for your needs

Your LIVESTOCK PRODUCTIVITY, your PROFITABILITY.



That's what Pennfield people care about.

Successful, high yield livestock feeding programs don't just happen. It takes superior products and interested people giving excellent service to make them work.

Sure, some companies approach the quality of Pennfield's formulations. A few companies even offer some of the same technical services as Pennfield (although Pennfield is the only local company with modern laboratory facilities), and you'll find some dedicated, concerned people in most any company.

But, no one puts all three ingredients together as completely and successfully as Pennfield Feeds. Pennfield people combine Pennfield products and services into the kind of complete livestock feeding and farm management programs that result in higher yields, planned growth, and increased profit for Pennfield customers.

Chemists, nutritionists, production personnel, veterinarians, computer technicians, business and marketing analysts, deliverymen, quality control specialists, financial experts, and more . . . led by your Pennfield Area Manager who can put them all together to develop and service a customized, profit-oriented program for you. These are Pennfield people. And, Pennfield people make Pennfield Feeds a better buy!

Weekly 51 - Cattle - compared with the previous weeks close

Closing prices on Slaughter Steers were 2.50-3.00 Higher and Heifers closed mostly 2.00 higher. Cows 1.00-1.50 Higher and Bulls firm to 50 cents higher.

Four day receipts 10,500 as compared 12,200 previous week and 15,700 a year ago.

The smallest supply of Slaughter cattle since August 1973 accompanied by a substantial upturn in Carcass trading served to trigger the greatest advance in Fed cattle prices since last April, and the closing leveles were the highest since July. However, Slaughter under federal inspection showed only a mild decrease from the previous week through midweek. Buyers were generally aggressive as they competed on small supplies for sufficient numbers to meet immediate Slaughter requirements and weight.

Sale reports

On October 9, 20 state police horses were sold at the state police academy. Robert M. Shaylor, Troy, Pa., was auctioneer. The sale lasted approximately one hour during which time the horses sold anywhere from $240 to $1550. All the horses were bought for pleasure horses, none for killers.

The horses ranged in age from 9 to 24 years, but went for good prices because police animals are known to be well taken care of and are in good condition.

One of the most valuable 30 minutes of time any dairyman can spend on his farm is observing his herd of cows. And it's important to note that it be done every day - preferably at least twice daily.

By a dairyman's own admission - myself included - that's often "hard" to do. There's "real work" to be done in the field, so standing around watching the cows seems like a waste of time. I remember the feeling. But it's anything but that. And I remember what else I saw while relaxing for a short while in the pasture. And how can any dairyman ever forget the final reward of that half hour or hour spent watching the cows each day.

The purpose of the observation is, of course, to find out which cows or heifers are in heat and to have them bred at the proper time to the bull of your choice. At the same time it was also an opportunity to watch the animals in their own natural environment. Their grazing habits, social status, and personality traits became more apparent. And there were always a few which would come up to their master for an extra pat on the head or a friendly "butting" match.

Another aspect of life on the farm which is found out there is something which most of us seem to lose at about age 10. I remember the days - as a small boy - when I was stopped in my tracks by any little thing. And I might watch a spider or an ant in fascination. Not many grown-ups have time or take time for that sort of thing.

But while watching the cows, there's also an opportunity to watch many of Nature's other creations. In a very real sense there's a re-discovery of the wonders around us and a rekindling of the fascinations of boyhood.

Last, and most important of all, the time spent observing for signs of heat pays off in the calves that are born.

A cow which passes her breeding time causes the cattleman grief. Once that animal is finally bred to the bull of his choice, he's relieved. When the calf is born nine months later, he's proud. In most any purebred herd the farmer is quite often so proud of some of his calves that he'll want to show them off to neighbors and friends.

Maryland tobacco surveyed

"Maryland tobacco is an industry as old as the State itself, and unique in a number of ways," claims John Witzig, Statistician in Charge of the Maryland-Delaware Crop Reporting Service.

Type 32 tobacco, as it's otherwise called, is grown primarily in Maryland, and we're the only tobacco-producing State in which growers plant the current year's crop before the previous year's harvest is marketed.

"In late February and early March," Witzig explains, "farmers begin seeding the crop in preliminary beds. But the crop harvested the year before isn't sold at auction until sometime between mid-April and early June."

Witzig's office maintains a full estimating schedule on type 32 tobacco, which during 1972-75 meant over $100 million to Maryland growers. The surveys, taken entirely by mail, are geared to SRS's national releases on crop production, planting intentions, and acreage.

Because many of the State's farmers produce only tobacco, the Maryland office sends out special tobacco questionnaires to roughly 300 of an estimated 4,500 tobacco growers. Data from other tobacco producers are collected on general farm report questionnaires covering other crops as well.

The annual survey schedule begins around April 1, when growers are asked how many acres they intend to plant. A June 1 survey determines the number of acres that were actually put into production.

The June survey also asks growers about their previous year's crop to get a firmer figure on final yields. The reason is that Maryland tobacco is air-cured for many months and loses about 85 per cent of its moisture. Producers, therefore, have a much better idea of their actual yield once they remove the tobacco from curing barns and sell it at auction the following spring.

SAVED FROM WHAT?

Lesson for October 17, 1976

Bachground scripture: Romans 6
Devotionsal Reading: Colossians 3:5-17.

It is easy to call Jesus "our Saviour" and say that "he came to save us," but what does that really mean? From what did he come to save us?

"From sin" is the customary answer; but even then we need to explain what we mean by that.

In the minds of many people, "salvation" means to be freed from the consequences of our sin. It means to escape the punishment that otherwise would be ours, to have the slate wiped clean so that there remains no "black marks" recorded against us. One of the results of salvation, as Paul puts it, is to receive "sanctification and its end, eternal life" (Romans 6:22).

The free gift

So, for many people the effect of salvation is to save us or free us of what we have done in the past. Yet, in a way, others see it as present and future tense too. If God is "in the habit" of forgiving us our sins, it may seem to us that we are saved from what we are doing now in the present as well as what we might do in the past. As the character in a novel once put it: 'It is admirably arranged: God likes to forgive sins and I like to commit them!"

In other words, it is reasoned, if through the abundant love of God I no longer have to worry about the past, neither, then, do I need to worry about the present or future either. The cycle seems quite beneficial: I sin, ask for and receive God's forgiveness, then I sin again and again seek God's forgiveness, and so on again and again. Since God's grace is free, since he accepts me as I am, then I can go on being what I am without any fear of God's judgement. Right?

Wrong! Paul himself raised that same question, "What then? Are we to sin because we are not under law but under grace?", but his answer is unequivocal: "By no means!" (Romans 6:15).

Paul's answer is most important for there are many people today who believe that since God is so gracious and loving and, since we are freed of the legalism of trying to earn or be worthy of his salvation, that, therefore, it is not too important to avoid sin in our lives: salvation is easy to get!

The New creation

And that's where that line of reasoning goes wrong: there is a difference in salvation being free and being "easy." It is free, but it is not easy! For the love of God saves us, not only from the consequences of sin, but also from the power of it. If we are really free of the consequences of our wrong deeds, then we are also just as surely free of its power in our lives. One cannot in faith accept God's forgiveness and still continue to live a life dominated by sin. It means that our acceptance of salvation has been a farce, a hollow gesture.

It is true that we do not have to become righteous in order to receive God's give of salvation, but it is also true that, having been offered it, there must be some changes in our lives that indicate that we have been sincere in accepting it. "Let not sin therefore reign in your mortal bodies," (6:12) says Paul, for that is a clear indication that we have not really accepted his gift.

The key is to be found in Paul's second letter to Corinth: "If any one is in Christ, he is a new creation" (II Cor. 5:17).

TO PROTECT FARM MACHINERY...Good farm management requires the housing of farm machinery when not in use. Now that the growing season is coming to a close, many pieces of machinery should be put under roof. We continue to notice too many farmers that leave their machinery outside during the winter months. This means rusty equipment next spring, loads of trouble, and a shorter life for the machinery. With the increasing cost of farm machinery it is poor business to allow it to remain outside and get rusty. Machinery sheds should be separate from the main barn and need not be tight; the main thing is to keep the rain and snow from falling on them. A roof and two sides to the building is often very helpful–north and west. Machinery sheds will soon pay for themselves in less breakage and longer life of the machinery.

TO ERADICATE RODENTS...Colder weather is approaching and many rats and mice will be driven from the fields into farm buildings. I'd urge everyone to make a special effort to keep them from setting up house-keeping this fall, and thus prevent an increase in the population. Walls and foundations should be repaired to keep them out. Storage places should be kept at a minimum and poison bait stations used to eliminate stray rodents. Many corn cribs and grain bins are about to be filled with the new corn crop; these storage places should be rodent-proofed to keep them out from the very beginning. Rodents will lower the feeding quality and the market price of grains, and make them very unappetizing to livestock. In addition, most rodents may be dangerous from the standpoint of carrying disease to livestock and poultry. Good farm management suggests a continued program of rat and mouse control at all times.

TO BEWARE OF FROSTED CROPS...We've already had our first killing frost in this part of Pennsylvania; others are sure to come. This means that such crops as sudan grass and the sudan-sorghum hybrids can be dangerous, if consumed in a fresh condition for the first week after a frost. Livestock should be kept out of the area until the plants die down; new sprouts from the roots may also be toxic. Frosted crops that are made into hay or silage, allowed to cure or ferment for 30 days, may then be used safely. Frosted alfalfa or clover may cause severe bloating, if the animals are permitted to graze the forage while the frost is still on the plant. Keep livestock from the area until the sun has melted and dried the plants. All other common grasses or winter grains may be grazed during or following frost conditions without much danger.

TO PROTECT FARM PONDS FROM MUSKRATS...Most farm pond owners have a problem with muskrats boring into the banks and draining the water; this has happened to many ponds in the past. We suggest that pond owners do some trapping of these animals, or get nearby youngsters to do the trapping. The muskrat season will open later this fall and the pelts are worth some extra spending money. If left uncontrolled, they can destroy a pond bank and drain out all of the water. Banks with at least 8 to 10 feet width will help prevent serious damage; also, the lining of the inside of the pond at water level with crushed stone will also reduce the infestation. Some attention to muskrat control is urged this fall.

It's time to plant a cover crop right now.

A fall cover crop makes so much sense. First, you can prevent excessive erosion problems. Second, you conserve valuable soil moisture. And third, you have the option of planting No-Tillage next spring. You simply burn off the fall cover crop with ORTHO Paraquat CL herbicide and plant right into the stubble. For best results, apply Paraquat with ORTHO X-77 Spreader. Why not come in for a chat.

Where to go in Pa. for flu shots

HARRISBURG, Pa. - State Health Secretary Dr. Leonard Bachman recently announced schedules for the period Oct. 16 through 22 for immunizing Pennsylvania's elderly and chronically ill against swine flu.

Dr. Bachman said the Pennsylvania Department of Health is responsible for 65 counties in the Commonwealth, while Philadelphia and Allegheny Counties will conduct their own immunization campaigns.

Phase I of the immunization campaign is being directed to the high-risk population. High-risk persons are defined as all those over the age of 65 years or those with chronic disease (heart disease, bronchopulmonary disease, renal disease, and metabolic disease or diabetes).

These persons will receive a combination innoculation that protects against both swine flu and A-Victoria flu.

Bachman said following the immunization of the elderly and high-risk groups, the State Health Department "will mobilize again for a mass citizen campaign by the first week in November."

Bachman urges citizens with questions on swine flu to call the toll-free Swine Flu Hotline, 800-692-7254, where trained operators will provide answers to their queries.

Phase I immunization for the bivalent vaccine will take place at the following sites across Pennsylvania:

Montgomery Co. 4-H sheep club in Regional

KIMBERTON, Pa. - The Southeast Pennsylvania 4-H Sheep Show was held Sept. 25th, at the Kimberton Fair Grounds, Kimberton, Pa.

The Southeast District is composed of the following counties: Berks, Bucks, Chester, Delaware, Lehigh, Montgomery, Northampton and Philadelphia.

To be eligible to show an animal or participate in the blocking contest, a 4-H member must be a blue ribbon winner in a local Round-Up.

Montgomery County had ten 4-H members participate on the Regional level.

In the 4-H Senior Showmanship (age 14 or older) Montgomery Co. took a 5th place with Nancy Haentze, Skippack, with her Hampshire Yearling. While in 4-H Junior Showmanship (under age 14) Robert Blum of Harleysville placed 4th with his Suffolk Yearling. In the last catagory for First Year Showmanship, Julie Miller, Harleysville, received a 5th place green ribbon exhibiting her Hampshire lamb.

Moving on to the Breeding Classes, Irene Landis, Souderton, placed 5th in the Hampshire Ewe lamb catagory. The Hampshire Yearling Ewe catagory found Nancy Haentze taking second and third place honors with her sheep.

Next to be judged were Montgomery County 4-H members who participated in the Suffolk Ewe lamb catagory. Again Irene Landis received a 5th place green ribbon. Robert Blum was the next winner for Montgomery County with his Suffolk Yearling Ewe also placing 5th.

In the Commercial Ewe Lamb class, Juliet Kagno, Lafayette Hill, placed 3rd with a white ribbon. In the Commercial Aged Ewe class, Nancy Haentze, showing a Corriedale Ewe, won a blue ribbon and a 4th place yellow ribbon went to Kit Jones, Limerick, with a Hampshire Ewe. When champions of the Commercial Class were judged, Nancy Haentze received the Reserve Champion rosette.

Something new this year was a Pair Class. Exhibitors could show any two sheep of the same breed that had received blue ribbons as a pair. In this class Nancy Haentze showed a pair of Hampshire Yearlings to place 4th with a yellow ribbon.

Last event of the day was the Blocking Contest. In Junior Blocking, Kit Jones took the honors for Montgomery County by placing 4th in a class of twelve. This is the event where the 4-H member gets a lamb right out of the field and is given one hour in which to card, trim, clip, etc. and make the sheep as presentable as he can in that amount of time.

Other Montgomery County 4-H members who participated in the Regional were; Ricky Schwenk, Souderton; Pam Miller, Harleysville; Valerie Kagno, Lafayette Hill; Bob Greenwood, Phoenixville and Kathy Haentze, Skippack.

Rates lowered

WASHINGTON, D.C. - The U.S. Department of Agriculture recently announced lower interest rates when financing terms call for one year or less under the Commodity Credit Corporation (CCC) Export Credit Sales Program.

The interest rates are being reduced one-half per cent for credit terms of one year under the program and one per cent for credit terms of six months.

The interest rates for six month financing terms, effective immediately, will be seven per cent for U.S. bank obligations and eight per cent for foreign bank obligations. For one-year financing terms, the interest rate will be 7-½ per cent for U.S. bank obligations, and 8½ per cent for foreign bank obligations.

The interest rates are being reduced to increase use of shorter terms of credit, and should be effective as an incentive to encourage exports of wheat and rice.

The interest rates under existing financing approvals will not be changed.

The CCC Export Credit Sales Program is a commercial program under which credit is extended for periods from six months to three years to expand export markets.

tember, and October check the current crop's progress. Full details on production and harvested acreage are collected in late November and appear in SRS's Annual Crop Summary the following January.

The Maryland office also publishes periodic reports to keep its tobacco growers and other producers abreast of current crop conditions. Each spring, the office releases an annual summary of production, yield, and harvested acres by individual counties.

"Nearly all our crop is produced in only five southern counties," explains Witzig," where the tobacco flourishes in the light sandy soils along the Chesapeake Bay.

"Last year, the five counties produced an estimated 21.9 million pounds of tobacco, grown on roughly 23,000 acres. Both yield and production dropped considerably due to adverse weather during the growing season.

"Just the year before, though, yields stood at an all-time high of 1,260 pounds an acre, resulting in a final harvest of around 30.2 million pounds worth $28.9 million to Maryland growers."

Winds whip through York County causing damage

By JOYCE BUPP
York County Reporter

YORK, Pa. - It was an "ill wind bearing no good" that swept through York County early last Saturday morning, leaving twisted, flattened corn fields and dropped apples in its wake.

Corn growers all agreed on one thing - bushels lost per acre would mount fast when equipment could be safely put back on the sodden ground.

Charles Hess, a top corn grower, would not place the blame for flattened corn on any one factor. "Much had to do with the varieties used. It's the time to check test plots and see just which ones did stand best," he said. The worst damage to Hess' 220 acres was on the tops of hills, and up the hillsides. His acreage is near Dallastown.

With 400 acres of high-yielding corn already in the bins, John Shearer, York R6, was eager to get back in the fields to better assess the damages. "We'll start in the no'till fields," he added. "They weren't quite as heavily populated and didn't go down so badly." John had been harvesting an estimated 150 bushels to the acre of wet corn, with stalks that had shot up to 12 feet. "I measured them!" he emphasized. "With the better machinery we have these days, we should be able to pick much of it up - but, it's going to be tough on machinery. That'll mean more down time while we repair things."

Paul McPherson, Maple Lawn Farms in New Park, farms both corn and fruit, and therefore, took a double walloping. "My corn damage was spotty, and I don't have the faintest reason why. It might have been some insect damage; or perhaps certain soil types caused the problem," he noted.

In any commodity, the first damage is to the profit. Apple growers were feeling that profit loss, while assessing alternate ways to use the fruit shaken to the ground by the up-to-50-mile per hour winds. Stanley Brown, who operates Brown Orchards at Loganville, feels they probably lost about 10 per cent of the Stayman and Rome varieties. "A lot of them can be marketed as seconds, but of course they only bring half the price of first-quality fruit. One week earlier, though, and it would have taken our entire crop of Red Delicious. We just finished picking them," he said.

"Because of an extremely early maturing of most varieties this year, our losses probably won't go beyond 15 per cent" figured Paul McPherson. He philosophically added, "Most of the damaged fruit can be processed for cider," so it's not a total loss.

Stewartstown grower, Glenn Shaw, also had drops to use, but "not as many as if it had been last year; then we would have been in real trouble." He felt that more stable marketing conditions in the industry this year would help in cushioning the losses.

Any way you look at it, corn-eating pheasants and cider-lovers will be the benefactors of Saturday's storm.

For easier carving, have the meat retailer loosen the chine (back) bone by sawing across the rib bones. When roasting is finished, the back bone can be removed easily by running the carving knife along the edge of the roast before the meat is placed on the platter to be carved.

rest of the economy, with the exception of the banking industry," he told Lancaster Farming. A dairyman with 80 Guernseys and Holsteins, Mummert commented that USDA policies of the last eight years "were to the best interest of all."He brushed aside any notion that the programs of former USDA Secretary Earl Butz favored so called 'big farmers.'

"What is a big farmer?" Mummert challenged, adding that the definition varies from region to region and person to person. On the subject of farm imports, the Franklin County dairyman expressed a belief in high tariffs to discourage foreign competition. A former committeeman of the American Farm Bureau Federation, he said he favors legislation which keys in on health standards abroad and beef import loopholes.

Paul McPherson of York County might possibly qualify as a "big farmer" - at least back here in the East. Farming a total of approximately 1000 acres, he has a more sizable enterprise going than most of his neighbors. But he, too, scoffs at suggestions that USDA programs of the past several years were carried out with the big boys in mind.

"What is a 'big farmer'?" the grain and fruit farmer asked"USDAshould not have to protect the part-time small farmer - the fellow who has a job in town from eight to five and then tries to raise a crop on the side on a field or two. "In McPerson's opinion, such 'small farmers' are competing with full-time farmers who are in an entirely different investment category.

"People who use the 'big farm' syndrome have never defined small and big farms," the York Countian continued to explain. "They're playing on the emotions of everyone who lives in Middle America and wants more - that's all of us. Turning his attention to large, industry owned corporate farms, McPherson said "they aren't that big of a success. The really well managed ones don't do too badly, but most can't take the bad years," he pointed out. According to McPherson, some farmers can't take the bad years either– but they generally survive, while corporations don't.

As an example of how some large corporation owned farms fail to make the grade under the free competitive system, McPherson cited a U.S. tire manufacturing concern which owned a ranch in Colorado and eventually ended up with the biggest bankruptcy sale ever heard of,in the area. Some reasons given by McPherson for such developments are that the 'family farmer' is a more dedicated individual, harder working, and more interested in the overall condition of his operation. Also, as manager of his own business, the 'family farmer' knows his business from one end to the other, while a huge industry-owned operation has to rely on the services of perhaps scores of people to put the total picture together.

McPherson has a degree in agricultural economics and 14 years of experience as a farmer. He considers the economics of scale to be "not that great" to make a significant enough of a difference in the application of USDA programs to 'large' and 'small' farms. Furthermore, he adds that agricultural trends (to bigness) are irreversible. "What benefits the big farm will also benefit the small farm," he said.

McPherson has a few other reasons for defending USDA policies of the past few years. Noting that a change in programs could take place if a Democrat gets to the White House next year, McPherson commented that he would not like to see a return to the days of supply management such as was common during previous Democratic administrations. "That was the low point for agriculture," he exclaimed, "not only didn't we make any money, we had to take government payments just to survive."

The York Countian also believes that the present leadership in Washington is more likely to restrain the growth of social programs, regulatory agencies, and large-scale spending. As a fruit grower, McPherson explained, he is very much interested in having USDA offer the kind of leadership and programs which would make regulations easier to live with.

Similar reasons for being satisfied with USDA programs were expressed by Craig Mitterling from Port Treverton, Snyder County. He rents 80 acres form his father, keeps some beef cattle, and raises 12 acres of vegetables. "I feel that the programs are very much in favor of the farmer," he told Lancaster Farming, "the family farm needs the free enterprise system in order to continue to be the backbone of American agriculture."

Keeping the government and unions out of agriculture are the primary reason Centre County's Elwood Way gave for being satisfied with USDA. Claiming that Democratic presidential candidate Jimmy Carter "has sold out to the unions," Way expressed some concern over how that might reflect in farm programs under a new administration.

John Hetherington, a tomato and vegetable grower from the Ringtown area of Schuylkill County, has a 90 acre farm. His reasons for endorsing USDA programs include: free enterprise for the farmer, few government controls, and increased farm income. "You can't ask the government to give you money, you've got to earn it, he concluded.

But not everyone would agree with the comments made by these farmers.

Forney Longenecker, for example, would like to see a turn-around in USDA policies. A family farmer from the Lititz area, he's also organizational director for the Pennsylvania Farmers' Union. According to him, USDA programs of the past few years worked out only because some other areas of the world suffered disasters which in turn opened up markets for U.S. farmers. He also believes that if a bumper corn crop had been raised all over the country this year (such as is being harvested in southeastern Pennsylvania) the price of corn would drop to less than $2 per bushel. "It could happen," the Lancaster Countian warned, "what I'm asking is "why should a blessing be a curse?" He claims that American farmers have the capacity to produce abundantly, but aren't adequately rewarded for their effort.

"Farmers' parity prices should be set at 90 per cent," the NFU spokesman continued, "so that he wouldn't be forced to sell his crops." Longenecker believes strongly in grain reserves and insists that the mechanics of it could be set up in such a way so that the program would work out well for farmers as well as consumers. "Grain reserves are like money in the bank," he suggested. Pointing out that "any farm program has to benefit the consumer as well as the farmer if it's going to be truly legislative," Longenecker says that the present - 'freedom to produce' is simultaneously also 'freedom to go broke."

As for the cost of initiating USDA policies which would embrace the NFU's ideas, Longenecker asks: "What's bigger - a decent farm policy or welfare payments?" He did not elaborate whether or not such a farm program would eliminate or lessen welfare rolls.

Longenecker is also opposed to check-off programs which many farmers have voted in favor of during the last few years. His reasoning is that if beef is pushed, for example, then "you're not eating pork or lamb." He does not want anyone to be slighted as the result of promotional efforts by another.

"These boom or bust policies we've had lately aren't helping the consumer or the farmer," Longenecker claimed. His answer is a reserves program and parity prices that start at 90 per cent. Also, he wants farm imports and exports to be triggered accordingly so that neither trade route would cause significant price changes. With imports, for example, he suggests disallowing most of them until the price of the U.S. product reaches 110 per cent of parity.

Leland Stanford is ready to toss USDA right out of Washington and replace it with a system which would put farmers on the same footing as big labor unions. Unhappy with former USDA Secretary Butz and his programs, Stanford says he'd like to have someone like AFL-CIO president George Meany at the top of American agriculture. A firmly dedicated member of the National Farmers' Organization, Stanford is strongly critical of USDA because of the grain embargo and meat price freeze. "I'm glad we're finally rid of Butz," he remarked in a telephone interview.

Stanford has a 45-cow dairy herd and 90 acres near Dillsburg in York County. Married and the father of five children, he maintains that he finds it difficult to make the kind of living he believes to be justifiable and that he should be able to afford a hired man.

Stanford alleges that USDA policies have shown a "callous disregard" for the average individual and that the Department has made it tough for farmers to get loans. He also charges that laborers are better off than farmers and that this situation won't change until farmers get organized.

The York Countian favors a program of grain reserves and insists that farmers should not have to pay for it. "It's for the whole country," he explained, "why should we farmers pay for all of it—it isn't just a few people who support the defense system." He believes that grain reserves and higher support prices would go a long ways towards improving USDA's responsiveness to U.S. agricultural needs.

Concluding his remarks, Stanford said: "The government isn't going to solve our problems, we're going to have to do that ourselves."

Animal agriculture won't be replaced

By DIETER KRIEG

LANCASTER - There is no question that there is an interdependence of plants and animals in the ecosystem and the agricultural economy, says B.R. Baumgardt, professor of animal nutrition and head of the Department of Dairy and Animal Science at Penn State University.

The Penn State educator made the remark in reference to some of the criticism that has been received by the industry in view of food shortages plagueing some parts of the world. Various groups doubt the validity of having animals be a part of agriculture, but Baumgardt notes that they are more than just food and fibre sources for man.

Speaking to a gathering of agribusiness people here earlier this year, Baumgardt noted that the American farm economy has become so efficient that it takes an average just 58 minutes of labor to buy food and beverages for one person per day. That contrasts with two hours and 39 minutes of labor per day to pay the equivalent of one man's average daily tax burden.

Animals, says Baumgardt, are necessary for nutrition, maintaining health, and the efficient conversion of remotely useful resources to the kind readily usable. Favoring neither plants nor animals in the total food picture, the Penn State professor explained that "both plants and animals will continue to be important alternatives in the total mix of our food supply." Some of the reasons are given in the paragraphs which follow. The conclusion is that animal agriculture is not going to fade away in favor of greater utilization of plants, as some crystal ball gazers and social workers insist.

One reason for the optimistic outlook for animal agriculture is that per capita food consumption has increased for crop and animal products since 1960. Baumgardt readily admitted that animal products are not essential in a person's diet, but added that balancing the daily food intake without animal products could become quite a task.

Also, there is a relationship between per capita income and consumption of animal products. Higher incomes have allowed families to put a greater variety of foods on their tables, and animal products are generally among the first to be increased. Aside from the better balance of nutrients these products provide, Baumgardt also noted that animal proteins are generally more palatable and add pleasure to eating.

Animal agriculture has been set back somewhat due to adverse publicity generated by some doctors and producers of ersatz items for butter, meat, and eggs. The latter has been especially susceptible to health arguments involving the cholesterol controversy. But in spite of all this, Baumgardt firmly maintains that many of these allegations have not been proven and animal products are indeed a healty ingredient in the diets of most people.

Baumgardt answers charges to the contrary with advice to cut sugar intake, increase exercise, do less snacking and in general equip the body with greater responsiveness to stress. Animal products are not conducive to heart ailments in most cases, the Penn Stater said.

Animals are important also in converting one form of protein to another. Ruminats are a perfect example, as they make use of grasses and turn them into milk and meat. Cows, as a matter of fact, are protein synthesizers for man, Baumgardt's research shows. Aside from this, animals can make use of land which would otherwise not be suitable for agriculture - such as steep slopes and rocky terrain.

with a history book of the Pennsylvania Farmer's Association.

Policy development was the major item on the evening's agenda, however. Several items were debated and amended before being voted on. A resolution which disapproves the minimum of one acre building lot size required by local municipalities was discussed. Those responsible for the recommendation feel the one acre minimum wastes valuable farm land. An amendment to the directive, requiring that sewage and water be available for plots lower than one acre, was put to vote. The amendment was voted down and the resolution went on the ballot as originally written. Another recommendation that shotguns only be allowed for deer hunting in Lancaster County was amended to read "shotguns instead of rifles" be used for deer hunting in the county. The amended resolution was later passed.

Some other policies passed were recommendations stating that zoning laws be revised to allow more freedom for farm building specifications, that an increase in wage taxes instead of real estate taxes finance the increased cost of education, that foreign importation of beef be stopped, and that AFBF oppose worker strikes at processing plants during the harvest season.

On the local level, the Association voted for the farm city week program being continued.

Only two of the 31 resolutions were voted down - those recommending that PFA mail a treasurer report to every member and that the food stamp program be switched from the USDA to HEW.

After the discussion of policy, votes were taken and tallied. At this time, Alan Bair, associate county agent, spoke on feed programing, forage testing, and the new pesticide law.

Bair noted that Penn State is now requiring payment of $10 per program for feed programing, which had been free up to this point. And, that with forage testing, the total cost of this process will come to $44, which, according to Bair, will be "the most well invested $$44 you will make."

Bair also pointed out that less than one-third of the Association members have been certified for pesticide application. Encouraging those two-third to become certified he said, "You stand to gain a lot by being able to say you are certified and that you know what you're doing."

James Kreider, state director, also gave a few brief remarks noting that Safemark, a service for members only which provides quality tire, tubes, and batteries at lower cost, had a profitable year, and that the open period in Blue Cross-Blue Shield will be changed to March only.

Eugene McDowell, regional organization director, had the final speech of the evening, discussing the new tax reform bill, calling it a relief program for farmers. McDowell also congratulated the Lancaster County members for their Park City promotion to be held in the upcoming week.

Other business of the meeting included voting on members of the board of directors. Five of the six were reelected. They are H. Richard Hershey, Lititz; Earl Newcomer, Washington Boro; Paul Hartz, Morgantown; Nathan Stoltzfus, Gap; and James Hess, Quarryville. Earl Stauffer, Ephrata, was newly elected.

Congressman and Mrs. Edwin D. Eshleman received gifts from the Lancaster County Farmers' Association at last week's banquet. The gifts were given in honor of the many years of service they have given the farmer.

An Extra Ham

Improvements in feeding and breeding have brought about changes in pork production in the last 15 years. The average hog today yields 14½ pounds more of lean meat - about the weight of an extra ham - than the average hog 15 years ago. But the total weight difference between today's hog and yesterday's is less than 2 pounds.

Factors which contributed to this satisfactory year for dairy farmers were good prices for milk and reasonable production costs, Sumner said. The only change next year is that production costs may run slightly higher, he said.

At the moment Sumner said, dairy farmers are "victims of an increase in production which always accompanies an increase in price." In times of good price, Sumner said, dairy farmers always push for peak production which results in supply going up while demand remains constant. Consequently, there is lower Class I utilization which means a lower blend price for farmers.

Sumner talked about factors which influence the milk market, and used the incident of last week's radiation report as an example of something "which hit the dairy industry hard because of over-reaction to the situation." Sumner said the dairy industry is hardest hit not because its product is more vulnerable than other products, but because the industry has an excellent sampling program already in existence which makes it easy to run extra tests, in this case tests to determine the levels of Iodine 131. Despite the fact that the levels never approached dangerous levels, there was an adverse impact on sales.

Sumner added that a good year for pricing in 1977 hinges on the Secretary of Agriculture continuing to adjust milk supports to 80 per cent of parity. Assuming this happens, dairymen can look forward with confidence to a good year, with prices probably not dropping more than $.15 per hundredweight.

Miles Thomas, representing Merrill, Lynch, Pierce, Fenner and Smith, Inc., mixed both good and bad news in his report about the future. He said it is his opinion that the beef market has bottomed out and that livestock prices will go up. This is tempered, of course, with the realization that "if corn prices skyrocket, this projection will be altered."

Now that harvest is coming into its final stages, Thomas said it is more possible to get a clearer picture of what is to come. Commenting on the tremendous impact of weather on prices, Thomas said that previous predictions of $2.00-on bushel corn will not come true because of the midwest droughts which brought down total production considerably. Now, in all probability, Thomas suggests that corn will go higher, although he says it will not reach $3.50 and possibly not even $3.00 mostly because "you can't profitably feed animals at that price."

According to USDA reports, Thomas said the poultry industry is expanding and the 8-10 per cent more broilers will be competing with beef and pork in the future. "We have had a strong hog market," Thomas said, "And now the prices are down. You won't see any great price advance in the hog market in the next three to four months." He added that "perhaps the prices won't go downs," but the hog market is more treacherous than beef.

Calling the grain market a "guessing game," Albert Landis, grain merchandiser for Pennfield Corporation, discussed the major factors which influence the price of grains, saying that the law of supply and demand still controls the market.

He said the weather has a very strong effect upon the price of grains, and mentioned the current heavy rains in the United Kingdom as an influencing factor since seeding cannot be done. After a severe drought, the worst in 200 years, they are now experiencing their wettest autumn since 1918, he said.

Domestic usage is also important in pricing, Landis said. Grains used through livestock in this country is three times the amount used in export. Landis added, "Feed demand for corn and beans will be the largest single influence on the grain market in the months to come." He pointed out that for the past 20 years, "expansion of the livestock industry has been predicated on low cost feed."

Grain exports also influence the price, but here, Landis says, "You run into politics." He talked about the possibility of a new power split in the world - petroleum power versus agricultural power. He said in his opinion agri-power is now coming to the fore.

Landis also talked about the desire for more animal protein throughout the world, based on a human desire for an improved diet which comes with a better standard of living.

According to Abe Diffenbach, manager of the New Holland Sales Stables, the livestock market fluctuates widely today and operates differently from the time when the "Chicago price" was all you needed to get on Monday morning. Today he said there is an 11 market total.

Diffenbach said beef imports have a large impact on the market and expressed concern about some U.S. territories which by-pass import quotas by importing meat, breaking it up and processing it and in turn bringing it into this country. He said further that retailers do not drop the price of beef in the store in relation to the live price. "I don't think the packer himself is the one getting the money." Other large factors in the market, he said, is supply and demand, and beef grading.

Bob Heilbron, with the Lancaster Stock Exchange, also recalled a different market, and the changes which have taken place during his 30 years in the business. He recalled when packers came to market on Monday mornings ready to buy. Today, he pointed out, "They can go to market any day of the week and they don't really need to buy cattle because they have so many different places to buy livestock that they keep a firm supply on hand."

This situation, according to Heilbron, is detrimental to farmers. He urged the young farmers to consider using the market system more. He said, "If more farmers and more people would use the market system as established, they will have more security in numbers and will have more feel for the ebb and flow of livestock whether it is feeder cattle or slaughter cattle.

"Market men can prove that people who consistently use the markets will in the long run have livestock on the market when activity is better off than normal," Heilbron said.

In the general discussion it was felt that corn prices could reach $3 by mid-winter, and it was recommended that if local farmers have the facilities it would be wise to store corn. It is probably also wise, if facilities are there, to buy protein meal if necessary, since an increase in soybean price is almost certain.

Perhaps the most valuable advice to the young farmers came during the questions following the formal presentations when Abe Diffenbach advised, "Stick with what you've been doing." He said that in the cycles of the livestock business, a man will experience good years with the bad and the overall picture will be positive.

members were joined by other commodity producers to support a requierment that dairy imports coming from European markets meet the same stringent sanitation requirements now imposed upon domestic production.

Turning to legislative issues, voting members questioned, and then refused support of, H. R. Bill No. 10339, the Farmer-To-Consumer Direct Marketing Act, because of the feeling that it would increase government cost without directly helping farm markets or consumers in any foreseeable way. State legislation supported was the Balanced Budget Amendment, which has passed the House and is now in the Senate in Harrisburg, calling for federal fiscal responsibility.

Newly adopted policies affecting the organization's internal operations lean toward better farmer-consumer understanding. Members agreed with policy development committeemen that the Association sponsor three to six yearly "Down On The Farm Weekends" to which the public be invited to view working farms. The establishment of a Speakers Bureau of knowledgeable farmers and farm wives to visit schools and be available free of charge to non-farm groups and organizations was approved.

Another adopted policy calls for both the county and state organizations to make available exhibits telling the farmer's story for use at any farm's open house for the public, or to any public event that would request them.

Policies offered from the floor but turned down by the voting membership included the halting of government livestock and crop surveys, agricultural exemption of vehicle air-pollution devices, and the issuing of new metal license plates yearly for farm trucks.

Additional business conducted at the meeting included the election of five members to the Association's board of directors. Serving new two-year terms will be E. Wayne Beshore, Eugene Ort, Charles Rauhauser, Glenn Shaw, and David Wolf. Lester Luckenbaugh, a grain farmer from Spring Grove, was chosen the 1977 membership drive chairman.

Eugene McDowell, region organizational director, presented a brief slide preview of the PFA state annual meeting and urged county members to support the state activities by taking part in this November event.

Special guests at the Dover meeting included State Director James Kreider, of Lancaster County, who briefly explained a number of services offered to members through the state affiliation. He detailed the PACMA marketing plan, FMBAS accounting service, Safemark farm products, and Farm Family insurance coverage.

Mrs. Helen Wivell, state women's committee, encouraged the wives participation in county activities and requested their input into state committee decisions. Members involved will focus on the areas of farm family safety and health, member relationships and welfare reforms. Mrs. Wivell announced plans for a Women's Legislative Conference on February 14, 1977, to be held at the Penn Harris Motor Inn, Harrisburg.

After-dinner entertainment was presented by Miss Molly Dehoff, daughter of Association members Mr. and Mrs. Albert Dehoff, of Dallastown. Molly was named the York County talent winner earlier this year in competition sponsored by the women's committee. Included in her presentation was "Milk Bucket Boogie," a humorous salute to the nation's dairymen.

Pork Chop Fun

Chops are a favorite among the many flavorful pork cuts. Since they are served frequently, it's fun to vary the seasonings and braising liquid for new main dishes. For more variety, stuff thick rib chops with fruit, vegetable or bread stuffing. Another variation of braising is to brown the chops and then bake them on top of dressing in a covered casserole.

More Contented?

U.S. cows are the most productive of all milk cattle in the world's major dairy-producing countries.

Calories Cut

One of the greatest misconceptions about pork concerns calorie content, since from the past pork acquired a reputation as a "fatty" meat. Actually research shows that many cuts of pork are just as low in fat as similar cuts of beef or lamb. Pork cuts on the market today contain a larger proportion of lean meat than in former years. The cuts contribute fewer calories, which pleases those on special diets.

Animal agriculture

Furthermore, Baumgardt pointed out, animals can utilize "waste products" such as meat scraps, whey, and even manure. In the production of flour, for example, it takes 138 pounds of wheat to make 100 pounds of flour. Animals receive the by-product.

Research at Penn State and elsewhere across the country has shown that animals actually eat less than one per cent of this nation's food grains. On an all inclusive basis, animals receive their nutrition from roughages (62 per cent), feed grains, (30 per cent), by-products seven per cent, and food grains less than one per cent. Ruminants use even more forages in their diets and thus make use of what man can't eat and turn it into products which he can digest.

Baumgardt let it be known that this country does not have a number one ranking in any livestock category. India, for example, has 18 per cent of all the cattle and buffalo in the world and 17 per cent of all goats. China has 35 per cent of the hogs, Australia and Russia each have 14 per cent of the world's sheep population.

The difference often is, Baumgardt explained, that other countries lack the will or technology to efficiently utilize their animal resources. Yet this country has been criticized from time to time for keeping its animals in alleged competition with man's food supplies.

Baumgardt disagrees.

Animals are a part of our food supply, our ecosystem and the agricultural economy. What's more Americans have responded favorably to grain-fed beef, for example, due to its palatability.

Among the more unusual capabilities of animals - and their usefulness in our economy - are:

The utilization of 'wastes' such as sawdust, feathers, old newspapers, garbage, and manure.

They also use crop by-products such as stalks, stover, and pea vines. Marginal lands become a part of the agricultural economy. Industrial by-products such as brewers and distillers grains, beet pulp, citrus pulp, cannery wastes, bakery residues, and packaging industry products become sources of animal feeds.

Livestock also provide a market outlet to maintain productivity and profitability of our total plant crop agricultural system, Baumgardt said. Furthermore, they can be gleaners and scavengers.

"People farm and raise animals as a way of life," the professor concluded, "but perhaps most importantly as a way to make a living. Feeding patterns and all else will change in accord with competitive alternate uses on a world-wide basis."

Weather-resistant RAMIK® Brown rodenticide keeps shape, freshness, taste, potency. Count on a long period of excellent control.

Potent treatment costs little in comparison with loss of just a few of your trees.

What's one of your trees worth?
What will a bushel of fruit bring?

Figure what your loss would be from just one dead tree . . . root-pruned or girdled and killed by orchard mice (meadow voles).

The figure the application of highly effective Ramik Brown weather-resistant rodenticide

You'll find Ramik well worth it!

Ramik bait is 26% protein

As food sources diminish after harvest, meadow voles go all out for highly palatable, apple-flavored, mouse-sized Ramik pellets . . . and leave your trees alone. Most other foods simply do not attract rodents as high-protein Ramik does.

The quiet killer

Ramik Brown pellets contain a small amount of the well-known anticoagulant, diphacinone . . . a killing agent used by professional exterminators. Diaphacinone thins out the blood so that the vole bleeds internally, painlessly, and dies.

Because diphacinone is in such low concentration, the vole does not react violently. Ramik does not "signal" its killing ingredient. Chance of bait shyness is much lessened.

Ramik lasts long, does the job

A special patented manufacturing process helps Ramik pellets retain shape, palatability and potency, even under high-moisture conditions. Also chemically treated for mold- and insect-resistance, weather-resistant Ramik keeps fresh over a comparatively long period.

Get ready to bait with Ramik Brown

As it says on the label, apply Ramik pellets after harvest and before snow. Ramik will knock down the hungry vole population. Later, when the snow recedes, a second application can be made to control high density populations or the voles that may have reinfested the vacated tunnels.

Ramik is a pesticide Handle it as you would any other orchard chemical Never allow exposure of bags to non-target species Do not expose bait in small piles, or in a constricted pattern The bait should be scattered evenly over the orchard floor at the rate specified on the label Reseal any unused portion of the bait and store in a closed storage area

Production Efficiency

Chickens have become the most efficient animal on the farm for converting grain to protein. Today it takes only 2.2 pounds of a feed to produce one pound of a broiler, compared with 3.3 pounds in 1950.

AGRI-KING
KEY TO PROFIT

This is the last in a series of six articles. All previous articles in the series ("Why AGRI-KING Builds Rations From the Group Up", "What is a Balanced Ration", "Is Testing Necessary", "AGRI-KING'S Objective - Should it Be Yours?" and "Dry Cows - Why Bother?") are availabie on request. Call 717-394-3047 — or 626-1164.

THEY TELL ME AGRI—KING PRODUCTS ARE TOO HIGH PRICED.

They might appear to be too high to people who don't realize the high potency of the vitamins, trace minerals, enzymes and flavorings that are in the AGRI-KING products. These products are not made only to sell. They are made to supply the animals with the micro nutrients they need to produce their inherited production and also maintain their health. They furnish high levels of vitamins, trace minerals and enzymes - not just a few of them but the whole spectrum of all vitamins, all trace minerals and enzymes.

These products might also appear to be a little high to someone who doesn't know all the service that goes with them. A farmer has the privilege of having an AGRI-KING serviceman work with him in solving his problems and figuring out how to use his home grown feeds to their best advantage. The farmer also has the privilege of talking toll free to AGRI-KING'S nutritional department.

They might also seem too expensive to someone who doesn't realize the money that is wasted in overfeeding or under feeding protein, calcium, phosphorus, vitamins and trace minerals. Each one of these is very important, but not one is more important than the others, and they must be put together in the right amounts and ratios.

The products might also seem too expensive to someone who doesn't realize that profit over feed cost is more important than the cost of a ton of feed. If a ton of feed costs a little more but is in balance with your roughages, your profit over feed cost will be higher than it would be if you buy a real cheap feed that does not match your roughages. You must remember also that the more expensive per ton is not always the most expensive per cow per day. For example it you have a $100 per ton feed and need to feed 20 pounds of it a day, it will cost you $1.00 per cow per day for her grain ration. But on the other hand if you have a ton of feed that costs $400. per ton and you need to feed only 2 pounds a day, this will cost you only 40 cents per cow per day for her grain ration.

They might also seem too expensive to someone who doesn't realize how expensive it is to doctor sick cows and replace 25-40 percent of the milking herd each year.

REMEMBER THIS — The most important figure is what does it cost to produce a pound of milk, not what is the cost of a truckload of feed, a ton of supplement, or a bag of vitamins and minerals.

Cute Curls

Bacon curls add to the appeal of many main dishes, salads and soups. Wrapped around a small piece of fruit, cooked vegetable or cheese cube, they also provide an attractive garnish. Simply separate bacon slices and place on a rack in a shallow pan (broiler pan may be used). Bake in a 400 degree F. oven for 10 to 12 minutes. Immediately twist slices around fork to make curls.

SPECIAL FEED TEST TO IM-PRUV-ALL LIVESTOCK RATIONS

High quality livestock feeds are expensive to grow, harvest, store and feed. Purchased feeds are generally even more expensive. Therefore, it is most important to obtain maximum feeding value from these feeds. This can only be accomplished by knowing their nutritive values.

The Special Feed Test to Im-Pruv-All Livestock Rations scientifically measures these nutritive values. Protein, fat, fiber, moisture, total ash, nitrogen free extract, carotene, and nitrate contents are measured on each feed. When a feed has a nitrate content, the test will recommend the proper restriction of such a feed in the ration. This Special Feed Test also reveals the calculated values of total digestible nutrients, energy and digestible protein. Special considerations of fermentation and oxidation are made in Fermented Feeds. These values are totaled and a comparison is made on each feed tested to standard feed values. Enclosed with the test results are forms aiding the livestock feeder in calculating how best to utilize the tested feeds in his livestock rations. Practical methods of growing, harvesting and storing feeds can be evaluated through this feed test.

This Feed Test has been refined over a 8 year period. Thousands of feed samples were evaluated to develop the information supplied on this feed test. Livestock feeds have continually requested a feed testing program that supplied them with the information to understand the feed test results as well as provide them with the tools to utilize livestock feeds to their best advantage.

The livestock feeder who properly utilizes feed test information CAN:

1. Know the actual nutritional value of his feeds.
2. Determine if he wants to feed any or all feeds.
3. Calculate how best to feed these feeds.
4. Properly restrict feeds containing nitrate.
5. Feed a balanced ration.
6. Evaluate and compare different methods of harvesting and storing his feeds.
7. Evaluate his total soil fertility program which affects nutrient value of his feeds.
8. Determine T D N production per acre of various crops.
9. Plan his feed production program.
10. Avoid or solve feeding problems.

The Special Feed Test to Im-Pruv-All Livestock Rations gives our customers the knowledge and the tools to plan, evaluate, and utilize their feeds more profitably.

PROTEIN:

why purchase it when you can grow it?

Are you paying hard cash for protein you could grow? Do your present forage crop harvesting, storing and feeding practices cost you valuable nutrients? Did you know, in some areas, it is possible to produce twice the nutritional value per acre as haylage than you can as hay . . . and with 75% less labor?

Did you know 90% of the digestible protein in alfalfa is in the leaves? Top quality alfalfa haylage will score 20 to 25%. crude protein.

When you put properly cut haylage in a Harvestore structure, you store more leaves, thus more nutrients. You save on labor. You reduce storage losses. You beat the weather. You increase storage capacity. You assure top palatability. You reduce field losses. You save money on insurance. In short, you get maximum benefits from your cropland.

Sheep showman has many talents

By SUSAN KAUFFMAN
Feature Writer

A bright smile, a quick-thinking mind, coupled with easy, fluent speech, and a seemingly limitless abundance of youthful energy and determination are the outstanding characteristics Linda Ebaugh unconsciously displays to all who come into contact with her. She is a remarkably busy and poised young woman who gives much of the credit for her long list of achievements and self-confidence to her eight years of 4-H experience.

"I have learned more about organization of time and energy and ease in public speaking from 4-H than from my classes in school," she says. "4-H has a lot to offer young people," she adds. Keeping up with Linda's achievements lately requires a constant watch. Among recent outstanding awards was her selection as the York County 4-H Girl at the York Fair in September. In early October she was chosen as one of 40 state winners in the 4-H National Awards Program. As a state winner in achievement she was judged on all her projects since 1969 when she first started in 4-H at the age of nine, all the honors she has received, all the programs in which she participated, her efforts in community services, and a personal interview conducted by the state judges.

This award was the result of years of working with projects to achieve quality, hours of compiling accurate records, and an ever-increasing awareness of her own capabilities and the confidence they bring.

Linda jokes that she got off to an early start in 4-H work because at the age of six months her mother used her as part of a demonstration in a child care project she was leading in the Airville 4-H Club. Having a mother who is dedicated to the almost fulltime work required in leading a community club, helped Linda become involved. But, her own determination and effort account for her long list of awards and honors.

Since 1969 Linda, the daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Paul Ebaugh, Delta, R2, has had projects in clothing construction, foods, horse, child care, dairy, vegetables, tractor, veterinary science-beef, sheep, candles, handicrafts, physical fitness, and teen leadership.

Her work with Holstein calves and heifers, Hereford beef, Hampshire and Suffolk sheep, and a pony and quarter horse has shown her a need for large animal veterinarians and pointed the way to her own interest in these animals' care. She is in her senior year at Red Lion High School enrolled in the accelerated program in preparation to study animal science and veterinary medicine in college.

"If I could be as good a vet as James Herriot in All Things Bright and Beautiful, (an autobiography by a British veterinarian) I will have reached my goal," she remarks.

So far there have been few, if any, goals she has set for herself that she has not reached. A partial list of her accomplishments in the past eight years includes holding nearly every officer's position in a local club and the York County 4-H Council, placing as second individual in the state and 16th individual in the nation in meats judging contests, being named the Outstanding Individual in the Junior Stockman Judging Contest at the Eastern National Livestock Show at Timonium, Md., in 1975, Keystone 4-H Sheep and Agriculture winner, Outstanding Girl in local and county 4-H clubs, and the Pa. Distinguished Junior Holstein Member.

This is Linda's famous pose which can be found with nearly any article on a sheep show in which she has entered. The animal's name is Hezikiah, and is her 1976 showing and fitting sheep.

There's more to raising sheep than taking part in shows. Here, Linda goes about her daily chores of feeding her market lambs and ewes.

Along with her ability to show top quality animals and finished products of projects, Linda has also developed skill in verbally communicating her knowledge of these projects. Her 4-H sheep demonstration entry captured the county and district prizes and the state gold award. Later she presented it at the Keystone Livestock Exposition before the Junior Suffolk Association and went on to place first at the Chicago International Livestock Exposition.

Yet another honor given to her which attests to her ability to share her understanding of 4-H programs is her selection this year as couselor for the 1977 state leadership camp.

Linda has 17 trophies and several plaques awarded to her by community fairs and service organizations such as the Grand Champion Dairy Showman at the Dallastown Fair and the Outstanding 4-H Girl presented by the Kiwanis Club. Her favorite trophy is the one presented to her at the 1975 Farm Show. Placing first in the state in sheep blocking and grooming was a special accomplishment to Linda. As with her other projects, she read all she could and followwed instructions for showing her projects. When reading material wasn't available, she found 4-H leaders or other adults in the community who could instruct her. One such adult helper, not a 4-H leader, showed her how to groom and fit her sheep but she could never seem to get as smooth a line as she liked. He told her he would will her his shears, and after his death his wife gave them to Linda. She said, remembering the preparations for the Farm Show judging, "I had my friend's shears in my hands and I realized I had the purpose, the inspiration, and the desire to place this time."

Linda's determination to do quality work in a number of activities requires her to budget her time wisely between school activities, 4-H projects, and church involvement.

"I always find time to do the things I like," she explains. "What you get out of anything depends on how much you put in. I don't belong to many activities in school because I have taken more advanced courses for college preparation, and I have to work harder at my subjects than some of the others in my classes do." Then she added, "I have plenty to do with 4-H activities outside of school."

In her 4-H experience she discovered something she suggests other young people follow: '.'Absorb what your qualified leaders show and tell you. Learn by watching, listening carefully, then doing. Organize your work. Set priorities; divide your time into worthwhile projects, and don't procrastinate." At one time she may have been guilty of the last fault, but says now, "I'm not such a procrastinator anymore. Putting off until later doesn't work very well when keeping project books, and keeping good, accurate records is a necissity for just about everyone who is serious about his work."

Although Linda goes about her school work and 4-H undertakings with a serious-minded purpose she is neither narrow-minded nor unsympathetic to others. While working hard at her own projects she readily sees and acknowledges excellence in others. She quickly gives credit to the "many highly qualified club leaders in the Airville club" and her mother - "She's a remarkable woman - a really great person. Mom has been the organizational leader for our local club for 16 years," she explains.

Mrs. Ebaugh says of Linda, "She makes me dizzy sometimes with all her activities. She always has to be doing something."

If the something Linda is doing isn't 4-H or school work related, it is probably singing. Linda is an alto in the High School Concert Choir, the Salem United Methodist Church Senior Choir, a combined community choir which presents cantatas, and the Bicentennial Choir of the Delta-area.

She teaches the primary Sunday school classes and has served as vice-president and secretary of the Youth Fellowship at Salem.

Linda helps her 12-year-old brother, Mark, and her mother care for the 170 sheep on their 78 acre farm and works on Saturdays at her father's grocery store in Stewartstown.

No matter where Linda is headed, she will be going with determination and confidence because she has learned to watch others, listen carefully, absorb all she can from others' experience, then do it herself - a sure formula for success.

After her rather large, eventful years in 4-H Linda has quite a few awards to her name. She is shown with a few of her many. In her hand, she holds her favorite plaque.

"4-H has made me aware of my duty to others. It also has given me the poise and confidence to communicate with others at all levels," she said.

They are two of 40 Commonwealth 4-H members being selected as state contest winners in the various project categories.

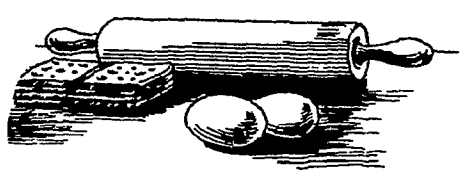
Home on The Range



Some like it hot; some like it cold. Chicken is delicious either way and a good suggestion is to take advantage of this by preparing two meals at the sametime. Serve one hot now and refrigerate the other for a cold treat the next day.

Two recipes below are made with chicken thighs. For many chicken lovers, thighs are the choice part of the bird. They average about four ounces each and two make a hearty serving. Each provides more than the recommended daily adult requirement of protein and niacin plus generous amounts of riboflavin, phosphrous, Vitamin A, thiamine, iron, and calcium.

Two of the other recipes in this week's "Home on the Range" include chicken livers. These chicken parts are especially rich in Vitamin A which is necessary for growth, skin health, vision, and resistance to infection. One four-ounce serving provides 274.5 per cent of the recommended daily adult allowance of Vitamin A.

They are, of course, an excellent source of iron, and contribute significant amounts of protein, thiamine, riboflavin, niacin, calcium, and phosphrous to the daily diet. Yet, four ounces contains just 146.2 calories.

The first two recipes in this week's column, however, are replies to the request by a hungry husband for "slippery" dumplings. These sound like what he had in mind.

And, don't forget that in two weeks "Home on the Range" will be featuring "Easy Suppers." Send all your ideas to us by October 23. There was an error in last week's paper. All recipes should be sent to Lancaster Farming Newspaper Box 266, Lititz, Pa., and should be marked "recipe Exchange."

Broiled Chicken Liver Kabobs can be cooked over charcoal or cooked in the oven. They are highly nutritious and delicious as an appetiser or a main meal.

Chicken Liver Kabobs

8 ounces broiler-fryer chicken livers
¼ cup butter
1 teaspoon Worcestershire sauce
½ teaspoon seasoned salt
½ teaspoon salt
one-eighth teaspoon pepper
2 tablespoons onion, minced
1 tablespoon lemon juice
½ pound small mushrooms, fresh, whole
8 ounce can water chestnuts, drained
¼ cup Parmesan cheese

Wash and pat livers dry. Melt butter in small skillet, add Worcestershire sauce, salts, pepper, onion, and lemon juice. Saute until onion is transparent. Remove from heat. Brush livers, mushrooms, and water chestnuts with butter sauce. Then roll livers in cheese. Place livers, mushrooms, and water chestnuts on skewers. Broil in oven or over charcoal three to five minutes per side, turning to brown evenly. Serves four.

Chicken Spinach Souffle

1 broiler-fryer chicken, cut in parts
1-½ teaspoons salt, divided
½ cup corn oil
1 package (8 ounces) mild Cheddar cheese, shredded
¼ pound butter
2 tablespoons snipped chives
1-½ cups warmed buttermilk
¼ cup hot water
2 chicken bouillon cubes, crushed
1 teaspoon flavor enhancer
¼ teaspoon garlic salt
one-eighth teaspoon cayenne pepper
1 cup frozen chopped spinach, thawed, pressed dry
4 eggs, slightly beaten
8 regular slices day-old bread, crusts removed, cut in ½-inch cubes

Sprinkle chicken with one teaspoon of the salt. Heat corn oil in fry pan over medium heat. Add chicken and cook about 30 minutes or until fork can be inserted with ease. Cool, cut in cubes. There should be two cups. In double boiler over boiling water, melt cheese and butter. Ida's Notebook

Ida Risser

Several local Fairs have been plagued with rainy weather this season and the Bloomsburg Fair was no exception. We drove to Columbia County through a light drizzle but weren't prepared for the muddy reception that we received.

Thankfully, the exhibits are housed in brick buildings and it was just the problem of getting to them from the parking lot. A tractor, pulling open trolley-type cars, helped somewhat.

We discovered some interesting entertainment in the afternoon that kept us dry. It was the horse pulling contest! As the teams entered the arena my husband and I picked our favorites from the 12 teams entered. He used his head and told me the team that came the whole way from Illinois would win - they wouldn't have come so far if they didn't have a superb team. Me, I just used my intuition and picked a team from Rural Valley, Pa., as I liked the looks of the driver and the way he handled his team.

As the afternoon wore on and the teams from Pa., N. Y., N. J., and Illinois progressed from pulling 4000 lbs. to pulling 7500 lbs., it became evident that some were better trained than others. Even though "my" team took second place, they were a real pleasure to watch. Some horses were quite skittish while a few teams were trained to obey immaculately.

We not only saw fruits and vegetables at the fair but we stopped at two different roadside stands and bought some. Now I have quinces to cook, Russet pears for lunches, and watermelon to serve for dessert.

Ifye talks about the varied people of Trinidad

Editor's Note: The following is a newsletter written by Raelene Harbold, Lancaster County's International 4-H Youth Exchange delegate to Jamaica-Trinidad-Tobago. Her visit to those countries began on August 15 and will conclude in December.

The IFYE Program is sponsored by the National 4-H Foundation in behalf of the Cooperative Extension Service. Funds for this exchange were raised locally by 4-H clubs, women's groups, agriculture groups, service clubs and agribusinesses, along with the National 4-H Foundation. Contributions will still be accepted and can be made to Lancaster County IFYE Fund, treasurer J. David Lapp, at 392 Myer Terrace, Leola, 17540.

Raelene Harbold

People of Trinidad

The Trinidadian has been described as "Latin" in disposition, "British" in character, and cosmopolitan in appearance. If I had to use just one word to describe the people of Trinidad, it would be "friendly."

I have received a warm welcome from everyone I've met and they have gone out of the way to make me feel welcome.

The people who occupy the island of Trinidad represent many different cultures and races. A citizen of the country may have ancestors from China, East or West Africa, England, France, Spain, India or Pakistan. All these cultures are drawn together, living, working and playing in harmony.

Harmony is indeed the right word. The word prejudice does not seem to exist in the vocabulary. We can learn a lesson here, I'm sure. They look at each other as a person, not as a color or race. The qualities within are what count, not the outward appearance.

Each culture has made its contribution to society. Village customs of old traditions are promoted to emphasize the different contributions made.

Many of the names of towns, villages, and streets can be traced to the French or Spanish influence, while the songs, dance, and music are strongly African. The British influence can be seen in patterns of behavior such as the drinking of tea and driving on the left side of the road. Furthermore, the national sport is cricket and English is the language of the country.

In spite of this, there is still a bit of a language problem. The people speak an abbreviated English using a lot of slang. They also speak quite rapidly.. In time, the ear adapts, and words that have different meanings to me, can be understood when put into the Trinidian context.

You can imagine, with so many different cultures, the country has a number of religions represented. When driving through Port-of-Spain one can see mosques, temples, and churches for almost any type of worship.

The Indian has introduced the Moslem faith to Trinidad. They have just completed their celebration of the month of Ramadan. For one whole month they fast from sunrise to sunset and many hours are spent in prayer and meditation. The final day is called Eid-ul-fite. This is the end of the fast and the time of "spiritual regeneration."

Hindu temples are the place of worship for the people from Pakistan. Their celebration is held in November at a certain stage of the moon. It is called Divali, the festival of lights.

V.J. Day is a Chinese celebration. It represents the victory over Japan in war and is celebrated on October 10th, or Ten-Ten.

Along with these are the Christian holidays of the Roman Catholic, Anglican, and other denominations of the Protestants. Good Friday, Easter and Christmas are celebrated as we would know them.

Each one of these holidays has been recognized on the Trinidadian calendar. It would not be fair to give a national holiday only to those of Christian belief, and not give a holiday for the others. So each of these have been declared national holidays and are shared by everyone. In most cases they are celebrated with family and friends (whether of the same religion or not) just as we would celebrate our holidays.

So the people have graciously accepted each other and each other's ways, forming a country of unique compatability. They share the same country, communities, schools, work, and even religious holidays.

These people have their own life-style, different from what I've known. But I've learned not to compare. Being able to accept them on their level and way of life has proven to be a real learning experience. I'm thankful for your continued support, and the Lord's guiding hand.

Workshop held

MEDIA, Pa. - A sewing and craft workshop will be held for prospective 4-H Club leaders at the Toal Building, 2nd and Orange Streets, Media, on October 20 from 7:30 to 9:00 p.m.

The workshop will present new ideas and techniques to make sewing more fun and creative for the beginner as well as the more advanced sewer. Greta Vairo, Extension home economist with the Pennsylvania State University in Delaware County says, "By combining the art of sewing with the fun of crafts, 4-H members can learn to express their own ingenuity in doing 'mini-craft projects', while they learn new sewing skills."

Adults and teens, who are interested in becoming 4-H leaders and starting clubs in their communities for young people, 8 to 19, are encouraged to attend October's sewing and craft workshop. Additional information is available by contacting the Cooperative Extension Service, Toal Building, 2nd and Orange Streets, Media, Pa. 19063 or by calling LO 6 0142.

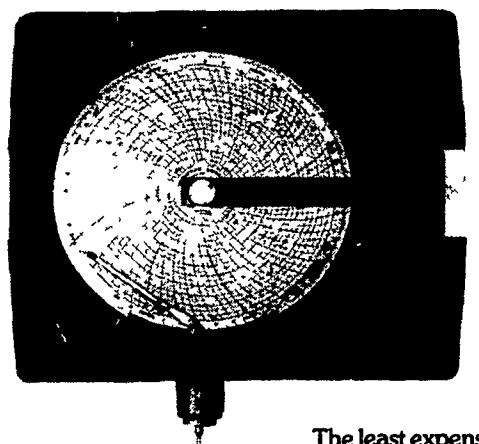
WHO'S MINDING THE MILK?



If you depend upon your milk check for a living, who's minding your milk?

The least expensive, one-shot insurance you can get is the Sentinel — the 10-inch recorder which charts temperature of your milk-cooling or holding tank. Here's what it provides:

- Permanent proof that proper temperature was maintained.
- Record of cooling equipment effic ency.
- Cleaning temperature recording on the same chart.

The Sentinel is also available with provision for actuating an alarm or warning light if pre-set temperature is exceeded.

Remember — if it prevents the loss of only one tank of product, the Sentinel has paid for itself. It minds your milk.

SPEND MORE CALORIES THAN YOU EAT IN MEALS

To lose weight, you need to spend more energy than you eat. There's no other way. To do that you can spend more energy by doing more physical work - like running, jumping, or lifting. You can also eat less so you're taking in less energy or fewer calories. Or you can do both.

Of course, you always need a certain amount of energy just to keep alive and healthy - even if you don't do any work at all. Usually, men need 1600 to 1800 calories a day for this. Women need only 1200 to 1450 since they have more fat and less muscles in their bodies than men do. Muscle takes more calories than fat to keep healthy.

To this basic need, add enough calories to cover all the activities you do and you'll keep the same weight. If you don't add enough to cover all you do, then you'll lose.

You get calories by eating. So the more food you eat, the more energy you're taking in. That means, small servings are better than large ones if you're trying to lose weight.

The kind of food you eat also affects how much energy you get. Of the nutrients in food (fat, carbohydrates, proteins, water, vitamins, and minerals) only fats, carbohydrates, and proteins add many calories. So the more of these there are in foods, the more calories they have.

To make one pound of body weight, it takes about 3500 calories not used for energy. So, to lose a pound, you need to eat that many fewer calories than you spend in being active. For example, eating 500 calories less per day than you spend means you'd lose a pound in one week.

WEIGHT LOSERS ADVISED TO AVOID TEMPTATIONS

A person who wants to lose weight can be his own best friend. He can make second helpings hard to get. He can put snacks out of sight. He can even get others to help.

If you're fat, the world out there is full of temptation. Even vending machines seem out to get you. But you don't have to be a victim of the food-filled world. Guard against it by planning ahead.

If a soft drink machine keeps taking your money, find another way to satisfy your thirst. Maybe it would help not to carry change.

Leftover cake and cookies left on the kitchen table invite you to cheat yourself. Instead, stash them at the back of the cupboard. If bowls and platters of food are passing under your nose at the table, serve food right from the pots to the plates. To get seconds, you'll have to make the effort to go back to the pots to load up. Maybe you won't.

Get others to help. At a restaurant, ask the waitress to leave the dressing off the salad or not to bring a dessert. If you're at a friend's house, tell her you love her mint brownies but you'll have just one.

Share your feelings and your eating plan with those nearest you. You don't have to make a big deal of it. But they'll want to keep you alive and healthy. So they're less likely to urge big helpings on you when they know how you feel.

Another item to help yourself is when you want to eat other than at mealtime, have other things for your hands to do. Write letters, knit, play the piano, or take care of the plants.

The world is full of food that help ruin your health and looks. So find ways to make food harder to get. It's a game and you're the winner.

Simmer Smoked Pork With Greens for Savory "Soul" Meal

Soul food has grown from humble beginnings to widespread popularity. Born of poverty amid fields of cotton, soul food has broken geographical barriers and gained converts everywhere.

Among meats, pork reigns as "soul" king. After cuts high on the hog went to mansion tables, the "leavin's" - pig's feet, hocks and tails, neck and back bones and chitterlings - were used to concoct tasty "soul" meals. Pork ribs and smoked shoulder also provide soul-style specialties.

In general, preparation of these cuts calls for leisurely simmering. Often vegetables such as okra and collard, mustard or turnip greens are included. For a savory sampling of "soul", prepare Smoked Pork with Greens, suggests Reba Staggs, National Live Stock and Meat Board home economist.

Women in agriculture - the unsung heroines

Editor's note; The following is an article based on a speech, "Women in American Agriculture," by Vivian Wiser, National Economic Analysis Divison, ..at the National Agricultural Outlook Conference, November 1975.

Women are agriculture's unsung heroes. Historians have largely ignored their contributions--probably because plowing a field, slopping hogs, churning butter, making soap, emptying chamber pots, and washing work clothes don't seem like great achievements. Nevertheless, their willingness to do tiresome but necessary chores has kept many farm business from going under.

Farmwomen worked especially hard in pioneer days. One account of life in Dutch New Netherlands (now New York) circa 1625 tells of the men spending their time hunting, while women were left to the farm and do the housework, not to mention caring for the children.

More than two centuries later, most farmwomen were still doing more work than their husbands. An 1862 report from the newly formed USDA said that on three out of four farms, "the wife works harder, endures more, than any other on the place." Unfortunately, the report offered no solutions to the farmwoman's lot. The author simply said that husbands could and should remedy this situation, and that a mother "should train her daughters for marriage and her sons in giving their wives proper treatment."

Although most early women settlers labored on small farms with their spouses, some Southern women managed huge plantations, especially during the Civil War when many fathers and husbands went off to battle.

Without their men, farmwomen in both the North and the South returned to the fields--running mowers, reapers, rakes, drills, and plows--cared for livestock, milked cows, and made butter and cheese. These women literally fed both armies.

Women's role in the Grange

After the Civil War, a number of farmers' organizations were formed in which women played an active role. The National Grange, born in 1867, realized the importance of the family unit. Women held several offices during the Grange's early years. Members such as Mary Anne Bryant Mayo of Michigan went about lecturing and urging other women to get involved in social and educational activities.

In 1892 the Grange voted to give Caroline Hall equal status with the seven male founders of the organization. Miss Hall had held various positions in the Grange, including first Ceres and lady assistant steward.

"Patrick Henry in Petticoats."

Another leader of American agriculture was MNary Elizabeth Lease, who became associated with the Farmers' Alliance movement. Admitted to the bar in 1885, she developed a gift of oratory that she used in support of Union Labor candidates during the 1888 campaign. Two years later she made some 160 speeches for the Union Labor Party, including the famous: "What you farmers need to do is to raise less corn and more hell." Called the "Patrick Henry in Petticoats," Mrs. Lease was well received in the Midwestern States, sometimes making as many as eight speeches a day.

Joining the lecture circuit.

A number of women became adept public speakers through their affiliation with the National Grange and other farmers' institutes organized by agricultural societies, State boards of agriculture, State colleges of agriculture, and experiment stations. Women lectured to both men and women on such subjects as food preparation and diet as well as general agricultural topics.

Women participated in the formulative meetings of the American Association of Farmers' Institute Workers, begun in 1895. However, once the organization was on its feet, the men voted--against strong opposition from the women--that the women must have separate meetings. A committee was set up to work on women's institutes. But due to stiff competition from the Homemakers Association, canning clubs, and extension home demonstration agents, the institutes were disbanded during World War I.

Lancaster Co. Society 1

The Society of Farm Women 1 met at the home of Mrs. Elmer Hershey, Lititz, on October 9. Twenty-eight members and guests answered the roll call by sharing favorite spices and herbs.

Mrs. Noah Fuhrman and Mrs. Barry Noll were welcomed as new members.

Rachel Bollinger was elected president, and Mrs. David Fyock was elected vice president for 1977.

Many of the members had assisted in the applebutter boiling at Landis Valley Harvest Days. Twenty-five calendars were purchased in support of LARC. Forty-three dollars was given for a piano to be used for communications work in India.

Mrs. Harold Fry entertained with a speech and some exhibits of Kitchen Ware of yesteryear.

Coming events include attending the Sight and Sound Showcase on October 23, a bus trip to Flemington, N.J. on Oct. 26, and the Lancaster County Farm Women's convention at the Farm and Home Center on November 6. Two other events are the monthly meeting at the home of Mrs. Simon Snyder, Ephrata R1 on November 13, and a Christmas Bazaar at the Farm and Home Center on the November 8. The Christmas Bazaar will take place at 9:30 a.m.

Don't give up water coloring if you're an adult

Barbara Strawser is busy at work on a water color she has been commissioned to paint for a famous inn, the Golden Lamb, in Ohio. It will be the second painting she has done for the establishment which is credited with being the oldest inn in the state.

By Judy Mitchell
Berks Co. Reporter

STOUCHSBURG, Pa. - Do you like to sketch or draw but find that the word "painting" conjures up an image of a dreamy-eyed artist who has somehow uncovered the mysteries of canvas and oils? If so, keep in mind that "arts" and "crafts" go hand in hand - that painting can be approached as simply and inexpensively as many crafts; and if doubts about your ability to produce a painting worth mounting are hanging you up, take courage from the experience of Barbara Strawser.

Barbara is a homemaker and mother who lives in Stouchsburg, Pa. She's never been to art school and says that until recently, she didn't consider her paintings to be "anything that even my high school art teacher might like." Barbara's been doing water colors for at least thirteen years now. Mainly for pleasure, her own and that of friends who admire her work.

Now, with several commissions for what she calls her "naive" or "folk art" to her credit, Barbara finds herself painting for profit as well. Although Barbara thinks she might like to do an oil painting someday, she is still working with water colors and recommends it as the simplest and most economical method for someone who might like to try his or her hand at painting.

Equipment

Surprisingly enough, your initial excursion into the realm of art will not even require a visit to a speciality craft shop. All the equipment you need to turn out your first painting can be purchased at most department or variety stores. Although Barbara prefers those that come in a tube, she says that any water colors will do. (If you do select the tube variety, a small tray with cups or indentations for holding small amounts of the paint will be helpful.)

Brushes designated for use with water colors come in a wide range of sizes, and you may wish to select several depending on the details you plan on incorporating into your painting; Barbara's favorite for general use is a number two.

Although Barbara has advanced to the use of rag paper which has a smooth finish, you will get satisfying results with any textured water color paper. You will also want to select an appropriately sized frame for your painting. Keep in mind that water colors are most attractive framed under glass. Most such frames available in department or variety stores will come with a cardboard backing behind the glass. If the one you select does not have a cardboard backing, you will need to add one. Barbara uses an acid-free museum board behind her paintings but says that almost any type cardboard will serve the purpose.

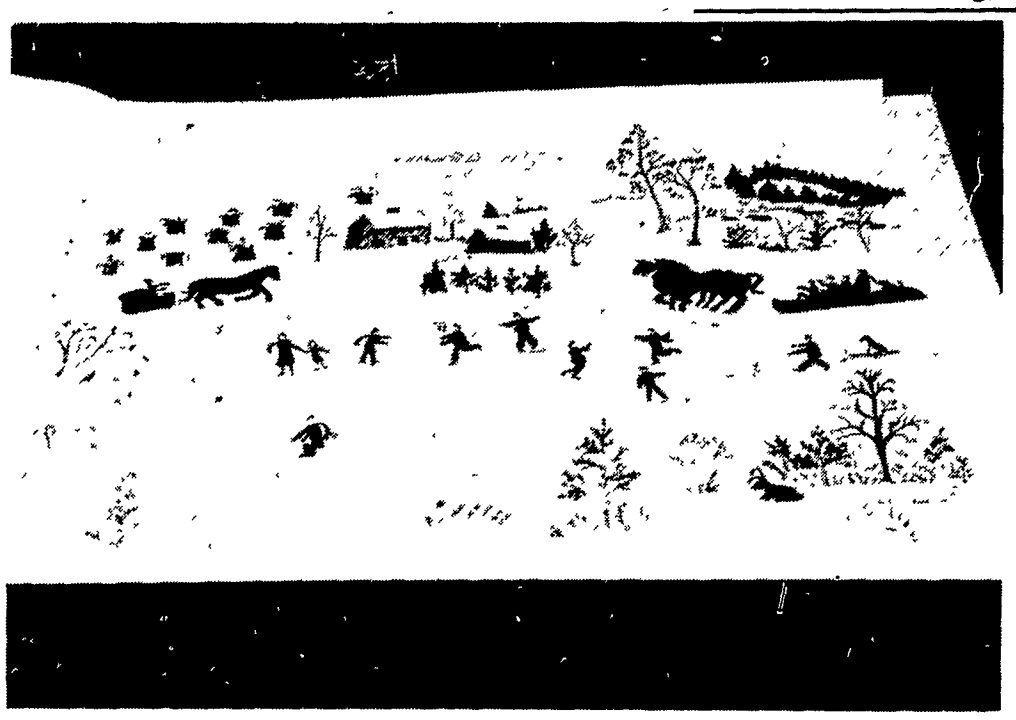
What will you paint?

Before going on to the actual method of water coloring, a few words about a subject for your painting seem to be in order.



This large snow scene is one of Barbara's finished paintings.

Although Barbara's landscapes are realistic in the sense that a house certainly looks like a house and a tree like a tree, she points out that she does not aim for exact representation of objects in her paintings. She says that she is often inspired by an actual scene but commits it to a paper "the way 'I' see it." In other words, let yourself be guided by what you see, but keep in mind you are planning an original painting not a photograph. In deciding what you will paint, it might also be helpful to know that although you may choose to paint some things directly on your paper, more intricate items can be sketched in lightly with a pencil first.

Method

One glance at Barbara's paintings cancels out childhood memories of a soggy scene with a green tree disappearing in a blur of blue sky. Barbara maintains that water colors are really the easiest paints to control, and that the key to avoiding the blurred colors often associated with the medium is to keep moisture to a minimum. According to Barbara, clear lines and distinctive color are quite simply achieved by using a kleenex or paper towel to remove the excess moisture from your brush after you have dipped it in water and paint.

How much or how little of your painting you do in a single sitting is entirely up to you. If you have removed the excess water as instructed, you will find that the paint dries quite quickly so there's no need to wait before going on to adjoining objects. And if you choose to complete your painting in short sessions, Barbara advises that even background can be painted in small sections as long as you remember to keep your brush strokes going in the same direction.

Once completed, your painting is ready for framing. Handle it as you would a photograph, placing it face down on the glass and fastening your cardboard backing behind it. If your frame does not provide a backing that slides in, you can fasten it with small tacks; for a more finished look, you can glue a piece off heavy brown wrapping paper over the cardboard and tacks before attaching your picture wire or hanging device.

Now, hang your painting on the wall, then stand back and experience the satisfaction of owning an "original."

Lebanon County Farm Women hold 36th annual convention

MYERSTOWN, Pa. - The Lebanon County Society of Farm Women held their 36th annual convention on October 6 at the Myerstown Church of the Brethren. One hundred and ninty members and guests attended.

Mrs. Marlin Bennetch, county president, welcomed all visitors and called the convention to order. Mrs. Ray Sattazahn, president of group 5 had charge of devotions. A musical presentation was given by Grace Horst and the Young Ambassadors. A memorial service was held for five deceased members.

Mrs. Aletta Shadler gave a report listing the allocation of contributions to the county 4-H program. Mrs. Shadler also encouraged members to enroll in a C.P.R. program offered by the Lebanon County Red Cross.

Mrs. Lois Erb, state president from Dauphin County, was introduced along with guests from the following counties: Berks, Camberia, Cumberland, Dauphin, Franklin, Lancaster, and York. Six past county presidents were also introduced.

Mrs. Erb told of the Pennsylvania State Convention which will be held on January 10 and 11 at Harrisburg during Farm Show week. She also encouraged members to enter the state essay contest entitled "How a Farm Woman Ticks in '76."

Mrs. Harvey Krall, county first vice president gave a brief lecture on sourdough. She then passed out portions to all women who wanted to start their own sourdough supply. She told how to handle it, and also passed out recipes.

The Rev. Glenn Hassinger, pastor of the Myerstown Church of the Brethren, welcomed the group at the noon banquet prepared and served by the members of the church.

The afternoon program was an instrumental and vocal presentation entitled "Through it all," given by Julius Garrett. Garrett is a piano tuner from Harrisburg.

Smoked Pork

2 tomatoes, sliced, if desired
1 smoked pork shoulder roll (2 to 3 pounds)
1½ pounds fresh or 2 packages frozen (10 ounces each) collard, turnip or mustard greens
1 small onion, chopped
¼ teaspoon pepper

Place smoked pork shoulder in Dutch oven. Add water to barely cover meat. Simmer, covered, 45 minutes if fresh greens are to be used; 1½ hours if frozen greens are to be used. Add greens, onions and pepper and bring to boil. Reduce heat and cook slowly until meat and greens are tender: 1 hour to 1 hour 15 minutes for fresh greens, 20 to 30 minutes for frozen greens. Remove pork from liquid and carve; drain greens. Serve slices of smoked pork and greens on hot platter. Garnish with tomato slices, if desired. 8 servings. 3 to 4 pounds smoked neck or back bones can be substituted for the smoked pork shoulder if desired.

Pair Sausage with Novel Scrambled Eggs

Often thought of as breakfast meat, pork sausage links also make pleasing combinations with other foods for brunch, lunch or supper. The recipe for Sausage and Hominy Scramble is a fine example of an around-the-clock recipe. Quick and easy, it's satisfying too, points out Rebba Staggs, National Live Stock and Meat Board.

Longwood receives beautification award

KENNETT SQUARE, Pa - Bedding Plants, Inc., a non-profit society of bedding plant producers, has recognized Longwood Gardens, Kennett Square, Pa., for "excellence in the use and promotion of bedding plants to help beautify America." The Society's 1976 Annual Beautification Award, a silver plaque inscribed with a petunia, was presented to Everitt L. Miller, assistant director of Longwood Gardens, at its annual banquet in Hershey, Pa. on October 5.

Besides using bedding plants extensively in the outdoor gardens, where annuals such as petunias, salvia, and zinnias provide bright color throughout the summer months, Longwood makes use of bedding plants in its conservatories all year-round. Coleus, impatiens, and celosia compliment the great conservatory chrysanthemum display in autumn; primroses and pansies are on view in the winter months, along with for-get-me-nots and marigolds.

"It's through the use of bedding plants," says Longwood's director, Dr. Russell J. Seibert, "that the horticultural industry best relates the aesthetic value of plants to the general public." With acceptance of the Beautification Award, Longwood Gardens renews its pledge to keep the best displays possible before the eyes of the public.

Land grant university is partner in agriculture's success

Editor's note: The following is a speech presented by William F. Hueg, deputy vice president and dean, Agriculture and Forestry and Home Economics, University of Minnesota, at Land Grant Day, Farmfest '76, Lake Crystal, Minn.

Land Grant Universities have been full partners in America's food and fiber system, starting with President Lincoln's signing of the Morrill Land-Grant Act of 1862.

The states were given tracts of land, which could either be sold or used for income generation to establish the colleges. This was a major revolution in higher education, and today we find many developing countries emulating parts of our Land Grant system.

There were two other significant acts signed by President Lincoln in 1862, the Homestead Act and an act establishing the United States Department of Agriculture.

Three later acts were significant to U. S. agricultural development. The Hatch Act was passed in 1887 to make it possible for states to establish research units as part of their Land Grant universities. In 1914, the Smith Lever Act provided federal funding for extension services. In the same year the Smith-Hughes Act established vocational education for agriculture and home economics.

This legislation helped build a dynamic agricultural industry that deals with food and fiber production from the time the land is prepared and planted until the crops and livestock products reach the consumer. Today we call this agribusiness, which includes farm production plus the supply and processing industries so essential for the agiculture we know in America.

In 1976 there are about 2.8 million farms in the United States with 800,000 of them producing about 88 per cent of the food and fiber. These farms are capitalized at over half a trillion dollars a year, about $540 billion. This amounts to about three-fifths of the capital assets of all U. S. corporations. In comparison, the automobile industry is capitalized at about $80 billion annually.

Agriculture is the major industry of the United States and the world. The food system affects each American every day. Around the world, one-quarter of what the world's population eats comes from American farms. The American farmer is part of the most elite group of our world population. He makes up one-tenth of one per cent of that population but produces 25 per cent of the world's food.

American farms are operated by individuals and partnerships. Only two per cent are in corporations, trusts, and estates. These corporations, trusts, and estates are large units, not the corporate farms that are so important in family estate management.

Employment in agriculturally-related enterprises makes up 28 per cent of the nation's labor force. Four per cent of the nation's working force are on farms. So for each farm worker there are seven others who provide backup in service, education, marketing, processing, and distribution. The present ratio of 1 to 7 will change to 1 to 10 or 12 by the year 2000.

American consumers spend relatively small amounts for food compared to those in other countries. For the fourth quarter of 1975, the National Food Situation reported 24.7 per cent of consumer expenditures were for food. Food consumed at home required 13½ per cent of total disposable income. An extra 3.6 per cent of total disposable income was spent for food consumer away from home.

At the age of 14, Steve first began performing ventriloquism by working with his father, the Rev. Jere Brubaker, travelling all over the country. Jere Brubaker is well known for his Parent-Teen Crusades and is affiliated with Lancaster Bible College.

Calories Count Up

After adulthood is reached the basal metabolic rate decreases per unit weight. If food consumption is constant over a long period of adult life with decreasing basal metabolism alone, a small surplus of only 10 calories a day equals 3,650 calories a year. This represents 1 pound of increased body weight.

Fall season keeps county president stepping

By JOANNE SPAHR

EPHRATA, Pa. - Being the county president of 31 Farm Women societies is no small task, as Mrs. Robert Gregory, Lititz R1, Lancaster County president, has found out since taking office. For instance, just recently, in one week she traveled to Montgomery and Dauphin counties for their county conventions, and in the same week she attended an anniversary get together for one of Lancaster County's societies.

"I've really enjoyed it," she says. "The personal contact with all the ladies is excellent, and it is enlightening for me to attend the meetings and share in the programs of the various counties."

Her own philosophy is that the county president should visit every society in her county while she is in office.

"It sometimes isn't easy, though," she says, citing the time she had three invitations for one evening.

But, it must be noted that the whole year is not as hectic as the Fall season with the county conventions, and that some counties and societies only invite the president one time during her two-year term in office. Also, some counties only hold a convention every other year.

But, nevertheless, her schedule has kept Mrs. Gregory stepping.

"I don't like to think my life has changed since I became a county president," she says, "but, my pace of going to meetings has accelerated."

Actually, from all appearances, Mrs. Gregory has always been an active and involved woman. A Penn State graduate of home economics, she has been a 4-H leader in the Brickerville Community Club for eleven years, a home economics teacher at Linden Hall School for Girls in Lititz for five years, a Girl Scout leader, and before that, she was a home economist with the Penn State Extension staff. She is also the mother of four very active children - Debbie, 22, Jane 19, Martha, 16, and Sally, 7.

"I don't really think of myself as doing more than other people do," Mrs. Gregory says, "it's just that we (her husband and herself) support things in which our children are involved." Her husband is a 4-H leader with the Broken Bit Club.

Another reason she has been able to do all her work this year is because of her family.

"We all have the same basic interests," she comments, "so they have all cooperated very well."

Their interests are basically rural oriented. "I grew up on a farm and so did my husband," she explains. While the Gregory's have only a few acres of land to their country-setting home, the girls have 4-H dairy projects and three horses.

Fall season

And, they raise a "good sized garden" from which they sell strawberries in the summer. And, to show how similar their interests can be, Debbie, the 22-year-old with a home economics degree, plans to join Farm Women when she is settled.

"My society (Society 3) is set up so the daughters of the members are welcomed as teenagers," Mrs. Gregory explains with a certain amount of pride. She goes on to explain that each society is different, and this is how her particular society perpetuates itself.

You know," she says, "Lancaster County has the largest membership of any county in the state, and one of the things that has helped us grow is that the societies take in new members." She adds that the original society, Society 1, keeps adding new members all the time, and has a real cross section of ages in the group.

"Farm Women is for women of all ages," notes the president. And, in an unofficial tally, Mrs. Gregory estimates that if a cross section of ages were to be taken for all counties, Lancaster County would have a proportionately bigger amount of younger members.

Lancaster County Convention

Now that she has seen a large amount of the 17 different county conventions, Mrs. Gregory is gearing up for Lancaster County's 59th annual convention to be held in November.

"We like to think we have a good program planned," she announces with a nearly hidden, tricky grin. "This year we're trying something different."

Instead of the usual keynote address the state president delivers, the county will have only a 10 - 15 minute speech by Mrs. Lois Erb (state president) on "The Joys of Being a Farm Woman." In the afternoon, Mrs. John Yocum will speak on "Glory Heirs" and John Bell, pantomimist, will perform.

"So, we're hoping to have our serious thoughts and a little entertainment," Mrs. Gregory states.

The convention will last all day, beginning with registration at 9:30 a.m. Doris Thomas, Extension home economist, will also speak.

One other part of the day's events will be the naming of the essay finalists. An essay entitled "How a Farm Woman 'Ticks' in '76' " is the title of the written work, which is this year's state project. Every year the state holds such a project to get all the members interacting and involved with Farm Women. Last year the project was creating Bicentennial dresses. This year, it is the essay. So far, Mrs. Gregory notes the turnout from the county hasn't been too favorable.

"We have only had one entry handed into us right now," she said. She is hoping for many more entries before the October 25 deadline.

"I know we have a lot of talented women in the county and hopefully they will sit down and write a few paragraphs on their goals and desires and whether they think they are really different from women of other times - whether they have changed or if they still believe in serving first family, church, and community."

In looking further into the future, Mrs. Gregory sees one important highlight for next year - looking closely at the county project, which this year was the St. Joseph's mobile unit.

"This project is something where we all pitch in and work together toward one goal. I think it is a great idea, and because of that, it has to be of real concern, so that the women feel sincerely that they would like to help," the assertive County leader said.

As is obvious from her comments, Mrs. Gregory has taken her leadership position very seriously this year.

"I feel that the more you become involved in an organization, the more you understand it," she says. And, after being county president for nearly a year, she has a deep knowledge of the workings of the organization which will be an asset to her in her coming year in office.

Talmage reveals plan to increase price support level

WASHINGTON, D.C. - U.S. Senator Herman E. Talmadge said last month that he will have an omnibus farm bill with "a substantial increase in price supports" prepared for introduction when Congress returns in January.

The Georgia Senator outlined his plans at the final 1976 meeting of the Senate Committee on Agriculture and Forestry, of which he is chairman. Several members of the Committee expressed their support for the Talmadge proposal.

Talmadge directed the agriculture committee staff to begin work as soon as Congress adjourned this month on a bill which would extend the principal features of the farm program. Major existing programs, enacted in 1973, expire at the end of the 1977 crop year.

"We need to increase the loan rate for the basic crops - feed grains, wheat and upland cotton - to about 80 per cent of the cost of production," he said, "and to provide a target price approximating 100 per cent of the cost of Production."

Talmadge said he wanted new farm legislation to permit farmers "the kind of freedom to plan and to plant that we provided them in the 1973 farm bill, but with a substantially stronger measure of protection against a collapse in prices.

"Under the present program, which we developed in the Congress over three years ago, farmers have greater freedom to respond to opportunities in the market," he added, "but they also have to bear too much of the risk of going broke if the market isn't there.

"The target price and loan rate levels in the 1973 programs are inadequate for two reasons," Talmadge said.

"First, the administration beat down the levels by constant threats of a veto, and second, the cost of producing farm commodities ran up far more than anyone had anticipated in the spring of 1973, primarily because of OPEC's blackmail prices on oil."

Talmadge also pointed out to the Committee that it must deal next year with legislation to reform the food stamp program after the House was unable to reach agreement this year; extension of Public Law 480, the Food for Peach Program which expires at the end of next year; and legislation to extend authorization for appropriations to carry out the Environmental Protection Agency's pesticide registration and regulation programs.

New Congressional budget control legislation requires the Committee to complete action by May 15 on bills which affect the budget in the fiscal year which begins the following October 1, making it necessary for hearings to begin soon after Congress convenes the third week in January. The Committee recently published a book, "Farm and Food Policy 1977," which contains recommendations for next year's farm legislation from farm and consumer organizations and leading farm analysts.

Johnson speaks at Holstein banquet

The annual Lebanon County Holstein Club banquet was held Tuesday evening, Oct. 5, at the Ono Fire Hall. Invocation for the ham and chicken supper was given by the Rev. Elmer Detweiler.

Dale Hoover, president of the club, held a short business meeting during which three new board members were chosen. The new members are Ed Arnold, Clyde Meyer, and Vincent Wagner.

Guest speaker for the evening was Calvin Johnson, former U.S. Representative, now with the New Holland Farm Machinery Co.

A report was given by Hershey Bare, who is State director, and by Mike Nolan, who is eastern Pennsylvania Holstein program director.

Winners of youth awards for high milk and fat were Joyce Moyer, Richard Krall, Dean Moyer, and David Baumgardner. Dennis Wampler was given special recognition for signing the most new members over the past year.

Arrangements for the evening were made by Banquet Committee Chairman Donald Bollinger, with Clyde Meyer, John Baumgardner, Robert Lentz, and Carl Reist.

Unionville Community Fair hampered by rain

By JOANNE SPAHR

UNIONVILLE, Pa. - Billed as "Chester County's Largest Display of Home and Farm Products," the Unionville Community Fair, here, celebrated its 52nd anniversary on October 6 - 9. This year, however, things did now run as smoothly as other years because of inclement weather. On Friday, rain fell on the festivities which included a dairy contest, a bicycle rodeo, and a square dance. On Saturday, however, the rains became stronger with heavy gusts of wind, and a tornado watch was put into effect. As a result, the Fair came to a grinding halt before the planned tractor safe driving contest, archery contest, horseshoe pitching contest, soccer game, and chicken barbecue could get underway.

Saturday morning also brought with it a complication for livestock exhibitors as the main tent which housed the dairy and beef cattle came tumbling down, trapping the animals underneath it.

"Luckily, none of the animals went wild," said one cattleman, "or we could have been in serious trouble." As it was, the animals remained docile, and all were rescued safely.

This is the first time since Hurricane Hazel in 1954 that part of the Fair events had to be called off. The horticulture displays remained open to the public, however, since they are housed inside the Unionville High School.

Dairy Show

In comparison to most county Fair dairy judging contests where the Holsteins greatly outnumber the colored breeds, this year the colored breeds were dominant at the Unionville Fair.

"For the past two years we've had mostly colored breeds," explained Denise Andrien, West Chester, who has been showing at the fair for about six years.

In total there were 36 Jerseys, 42 Ayrshires, 16 Guernseys, and 35 Holsteins. The "old faithfuls" who show at the fair year after year attribute the popularity of the colored breeds to the fact that Chester County as a whole, has gravitated toward them, and now the competition is more enjoyable.

This year's show, which was about the same size as last year's, began with a fitting and showmanship contest. Denise Andrien, 16, walked away with both titles in the senior division, and her brother, Bruce 14, took junior fitter. Junior showman was Patty Jenkins, Toughkenamon. Denise has been showing for six years, and Bruce ha been working at his for five years.

In the Jersey breed, Mildred Seeds, Downingtown, took the grand championship title with Top-O-Hill R H Two Penny, a four-year-old. Penny was grand champion at the Bloomsburg Fair, and repeated the performance at the Gratz Fair, and was the reserve champion at the York Interstate Fair. Ms. Seeds also had the reserve grand champion, the reserve senior champion, and the junior champion at Unionville.

Ayrshire

The Ayrshire competition was dominated by one family - the Henleys of Cochranville. Kennard E. Henley, III, walked away with a number of first prizes. He took first in senior heifer calf, senior yearling, three-year-old, junior get of sire, best three females, and produce of dam.

His younger brother, William, took first placings in intermediate heifer, junior yearling, two-year-old fresh, best udder, senior get of sire, and best dairy herd.

That left only the junior heifer class and five-year-old classes, taken by Sharon Nolan, and four-year-old class taken by Anne and Nelson Young. Dam and daughter class was taken by another Henley, Kennard Henley, Jr., the father of the two top winners.

Guernsey

And, if the Ayrshire competition was dominated by brothers, the Guernsey competition was led by a husband and wife team, Scott and Elsie Wolff, Quarryville. In a near repeat performance of the dairy show at the Solanco Fair last month, they had the first place animals in junior heifer calf, intermediate heifer calf, senior heifer calf, senior yearling, two-year-old freshened, three-year-old, four-year-old, best udder, junior get of sire, senior get of sire, best three females, dairy herd, produce of dam, and dam and daughter.

Denise Andrien had the first place junior yearling, and Elizabeth Jenkins had the first place two-year-old never freshened.

Beef Show

This was the first year for the 4-H Beef Show at the Unionville Fair, and while the showmen were cooperative, the weather was not. Torrents of rain nearly halted the show before it began, but after a brief deliberation, the show went on.

Eighteen animals were shown, in total, and three brothers - Ed, Bill, and Dave Wylie - took all the championship spots. The Wylie brothers are from Octorara Farms, Nottingham.

Ed, 15, had the grand champion of the show. The animal was a Simmental-Angus cross, which no one had wanted at the club calf sale held at Octorara Farms last year. The animal, however, has turned out to be a champion twice now--it took the cham-residue to save soil, time, fuel, labor and moisture. Do it with a Brady chisel plow: mounted or pull-type.

Fall shred 'n chisel. It's a great way to handle today's corn stalks (double per acre what they were a dozen years ago). And to work against high fuel costs and rising demands on your time.

Start with the Brady 2166 shredder. It's a rugged flail-knife design with 72 super-alloy side slicers that shred heaviest stalks up fine instead of bashing them down like the old chain flails. Residue is almost perfect for fast decomposition. And the Brady 2166 works on up to 20% less power.

Then, follow with a heavy-duty Brady chisel. Leave your fall fields rough on top, trash thoroughly mixed, to halt soil blowing while holding moisture and snow deep in the well worked soil.

Ask your Brady dealer to compare his shredders and chisels—reputation, original cost and maintenance—with other fall tillage equipment. Think about fuel savings, less field time, saving your soil, holding more moisture and fast residue decomposition. Think about earlier planting and bigger crop yields next year.

Brady fall shred 'n chisel tillage could easily hold the boost in field efficiency you have been looking for.

Spoilage noted

WASHINGTON, D.C. - The U.S. Department of Agriculture and Swift and Company jointly warned consumers of a possible spoilage problem involving the 21-ounce size of Swift's canned "Ham-in-the - Round." No problem has been found in other sizes of this product or with other Swift canned meats, USDA said.

According to USDA's Animal and Plant Health Inspection Service, Swift and Company has been voluntarily recalling the canned ham patties.

Swift's Ham-in-the-Round is a refrigerated product packed in a metal container. Each 21-ounce can contains 12 ham patties.

The ham patties do not constitute a health hazard; however, in recent months, swollen cans have been reported. The problem involves contamination by food spoilage bacteria, APHIS officials said.

Consumers having the 21-ounce size of the product should return it to the market where purchased, or any market handling Swift products, APHIS said.

What's New

AIR CLEANER

The WEK air pre-kleener is now available in three fiberglass models designed for the smaller units such as those in general use by farm operators. Tractors, heavy construction equipment, trucks and the like benefit from this concept of removing dust, dirt, moisture and other impurities before air intake. WEK air pre-kleeners are adapted to fit almost every size air intake plenum.

The fiberglass models of the WEK air pre-kleener have the same ball bearing mounted stainless steel revolving vane assemblies driven by the incoming air flow as the now familiar all metal models. These vanes spin in a sealed bearing housing. The centrifugal force carries moisture and impurities to the outer perimeter of the unit where they are discharged while dry, clean air is drawn in through the plenum chamber port. The fiberglass construction permits the manufacturer to provide lower priced air pre-cleaners wherever appearance is not of primary concern. These models provide the same improved fuel performance and longer lasting filters as other WEK models do.

A total of 14 WEK models are available. With adapters, fiberglass models are fitted to air intakes from one inch to 4½ inch diameters. Aluminum models fit intakes from three inch to 13 inch diameters.

Chairman of dairy show loves working with youth

By JOANNE SPAHR

UNIONVILLE, Pa. - The dairy show has been a part of the Unionville Fair for ten years. For six of those ten, Charles Wollaston, Maple Lawn Farms, Toughkenamon, Pa., has been the chairman--the man with all the responsibility and problems to work out.

"I like to encourage the young people to show," he explained when asked why he keeps taking on the chairmanship year after year."and, this year there were more exhibitors in the different breeds--there were five new showman for Holsteins--all young," he adds.

His enthusiam for working with youth is really apparent from his background. For 22 years he has been a 4-H leader of the Manor Dairy Club, and besides that, he has six children of his own. His youngest, Elizabeth, took reserve junior champion honors of the Jersey breed at the show last week with her 4-H animal.

"I sort of follow my children and what they do," he stated after looking back over his career as 4-H leader. "You have to sacrifice a little bit to be in these leadership roles, but I think it's worth it," he commented.

Charles Wollaston, Toughkenamon, has been the chairman of the dairy show at the Unionville Fair for six years now. Part of his job is setting up and taking down the snow fence that surrounds the livestock tent. This year's Fair was rained out at one point, and that meant tearing down the snow fence in the mud.

And, while he makes it a point to help and encourage his children (as well as others), they reciprocate his interest by helping out in many ways. For instance, Betsey entered all the dairy entries into the record book, and his daughter Nancy, 24, helped with record keeping at the Fair.

But, of course, record keeping is just a small part of a chairman's duties. Wollaston is responsible for setting up the snow fence, taking care of registration, getting the judges, taking responsibility for the tent, and even such basic things as spreading the manure.

"I've had very good cooperation this year--the exhibitors have really helped me clean up," he said.

This year he really needed help to clean up, because of the mess the rainstorm made of last week's show. At one point, the tent collasped, causing much concern for Wollastonb as well as the owners and exhibitors of the animals.

After all these years, what values does he see stemming from the dairy shows?

"Owning and showing an animal gives young people responsibility and sportsmanship. And, if there's one thing I stress, it's 'stick with it.'" To explain his comment, he sites the example of one of his children who started out with a white ribbon the first time she showed her animal, and with hard work, brought the animal to grand champion of show within a three year span.

And, this year there was a small change in policy which Wollaston was really pleased with.

"Everybody who entered got a little something for just showing," he said with obvious satisfaction. Although most of the entrants placed in the dairy competition, those who didn't, received two dollars just for taking part in the show.

"After all, it takes money to transport the animals here," Wollaston reminded. But, the monetary reward will also be an incentive to draw the showmen back another year. This is the aspect of the new policy which really makes Wollaston the happiest.

Charles Wollaston has some good concepts to teach all people, whether they be youth or adult, and with his continued efforts as 4-H leader and chairman of shows, it's possible that more young adults will get a chance to learn about them and test them out.

Grangers win service awards

HARRISBURG - Kennett Grange of southern Chester County has won the 1976 community service award of the Pennsylvania State Grange, J. Luther Snyder, State Grange master announced last week.

Second place in the annual contest went to Perry Valley Grange of Perry County, with Hookstown Grange of Beaver County third, and Washington Grange of Lehigh County fourth.

Kennett Grange won top honors on the basis of its leadership in efforts to oppose restrictive legislation that would have made mushroom production a non-agricultural industry. Citing the economic importance of the mushroom industry to Chester County communities, Kennett Grange was instrumental in arranging several meetings of mushroom growers and the House Agricultural Committee of the General Assembly.

The proposed legislation, which would have provided for the unionization of workers and contributions from growers to the unemployment compensation fund, eventually was defeated. Kennett Grange also has asked for limitations on mushroom imports as a protection for American mushroom growers.

The project was one of a dozen carried out by Kennett Grange during the year. Included were Easter and Halloween parties for children, a Christmas party for underprivileged children, presentation of a flagpole to the community swimming pool, and a meeting and demonstrations to help people interested in gardening.

The Kennett program now will be judged, along with other state winners, in the National Grange Community Service contest.

The second place winner, Perry Valley Grange, logged a total of 1,582 hours in a wide variety of projects that included participation in two local fairs. Hookstown Grange's major effort involved sponsorship and management of the 30th annual Hookstown fair. Washington Grange raised $900 for a kidney transplant patient.

Pork Provides Vitamins

Health studies have shown that the diets of many older people are often low in thiamin and riboflavin. Meat is an abundant source of these B vitamins as well as niacin and B 12. For instance, one 3½ ounce serving of lean pork provides all of the senior citizen's daily thiamin needs, three times as much as any other food source.

Pork's Thiamin Plus

A poor diet may cause mild symptoms of thiamin deficiency such as constipation, muscle fatigue, loss of appetite, depression and irritatability. Since the body cannot store thiamin in quantity it should be provided daily in the diet. Pork is the best food source of this nutrient.

Pork-a-Good Value

Pork is a good value in the meat case. The homemaker can count on 2½ to 5 servings of ham, pork chops and pork steaks per pound, compared to meats like chicken, which average 1 and one-third servings per pound.

FFA snowmobile show has safety course

ANNVILLE, Pa. - The Little Dutchmen FFA Snowmobile Show, to be conducted the weekend of October 22 and 23 at the Lebanon Valley Mall, is a project of the BOAC (Building our American Communities) and safety committees.

The intent of the show is to have several models of snowmobiles on display so prospective buyers can compare various makes. The show also makes it possible to see the improvements and changes the various companies have made in the past year. At the mall safety movies the dealers have provided will be shown. As an added safety activity, this year the Pennsylvania safe snowmobiling course for drivers between the ages of 10 to 16 will be offered. As of April 1, all children between these ages must have completed this safety course and received the drivers certificate before they can operate a snowmobile off their parents' property. The safety course will start on October 22 at 7 p.m. and conclude on Saturday morning. The instructors for the course will be Larry Blauch and Lowell Morton (FFA advisor at Annville).

Area snowmobilers interested in taking the Pennsylvania snowmobile safety course may enroll for the Class, according to The Little Dutchmen FFA Chapter, who has volunteered to sponsor the program in this area. The program is geared for youngsters 10 to 16 years, but all snowmobilers over 16 are invited to take the course.

The course will consist of two, three hour sessions and will start at 7 p.m. on October 22 and conclude on Saturday morning. There are no charges for the safety course.

Members of the Little Dutchman FFA urge area snowmobilers to enroll for the course. All students who pass the course successfully will receive a certificate and a safe snowmobiler patch issued by the Secretary of the Pennsylvania Department of Environmental Resources.

Youngsters may qualify for their certificate by taking the Safety Course and passing the written and practical examinations. The course content will cover winter clothing, machine safety, snowmobile highway laws and regulations, and riding procedures. Further information can be obtained from the instructors; Larry Blauch, 865-2994 or Lowell Morton 867-1970.

Committee schedules meeting

WASHINGTON, D.C. - The U.S. Department of Agriculture Advisory Committee on Regulatory Programs will examine Federal marketing orders at its second meeting on October 20 and 21. Marketing orders for fruits and vegetables will be studied the first day, and milk marketing orders the second day. The meeting will be held in Room 218 of USDA's Administration Building in Washington and is open to the public.

Former Secretary of Agriculture Earl Butz established the two-year advisory committee in March. At its first meeting on June 8 and 9, the committee looked at a wide range of USDA regulatory programs, and selected four program areas for special study. Federal marketing orders are the first on the list.

The eight-member committee was expanded to nine in early September when the former Secretary announced the appointment of Rita Zimmer Johnston of Bethesda, Md., as a "grassroots consumer" member.

The committee consists of producer, processor, consumer, and government representatives, and is headed by Richard L. Feltner, assistant secretary for marketing and consumer services in USDA. Donald E. Wilkinson, administrator of USDA's Agricultural Marketing Service, is the committee's executive secretary.

Time will be allotted during the meeting for members of the public to present their views on marketing order programs, according to Wilkinson.

Written statements may be submitted to the committee either before or after the meeting to the address below.

Anyone wishing further information about the committee or its second meeting should contact Donald E. Wilkinson, USDA-AMS, Washington, D.C. 20250.

Meeting set

The open board meeting will be at 7:30 p.m., on November 14 in the Dolphin Room of the Executive Inn.

The annual meeting, a luncheon, will be at 12:30 p.m., November 15 in the ABC Room at the Kentucky Fair and Exposition Center.

Business will be conducted during the open board meeting. The purpose of the annual meeting is entertainment. It will be on the second floor of the Exposition Center, to the right of the front entrance. The American Angus Association annual meeting will be in the same building and the Auxiliary meeting will be conducted in time to attend it.

Cow slaughter shows seasonal increase

DENVER, Colo. - U.S. cow slaughter has been showing typical Fall increases, the American National Cattlemen's Association points out, but the kill rate is now running below the record high levels reached in the Fall of 1975.

ANCA noted in its monthly report on the cow herd that the number of cows slaughtered in August was 857,000 head. This was up from the July total of 810,000, but it was 16 percent less than the record high August kill of one million head in 1975.

The August cow kill was 11 percent greater than the previously projected total of 770,000 head.

For the January-August period, U.S. cow slaughter totaled 6,747,000 heads - 8 percent more than earlier projections and 1 percent greater than in the same period last year. (The projections are monthly and annual cow slaughter rates previously estimated by Cattle-Fax economists as being needed to balance cow herd size with beef demand and increased production cost levels.)

When figures for September are released, ANCA said, it is expected that cow slaughter for the first three quarters of the year will have dropped below the year-earlier total but still will be ahead of projections.

Adverse economics along with high roughage costs are expected to result in a continued high rate of cow slaughter in the months ahead, said Wray Finney, ANCA president. It appears that total 1976 cow slaughter will be substantially more than estimated early this year, but it will be less than the 1975 total of 11.5 million head.

"The basic cow herd continues to move back toward a size more nearly in line with beef demand," Finney said. "However, at this time there are still large supplies of yearling cattle as well as fed cattle. Also putting pressure on the markets are recent very large increases in pork and poultry production."

Meat import quotas welcomed

DENVER, Colo. - President Ford's imposition of meat import quotas is welcome news to hard-pressed cattlemen, Wray Finney, president of the American National Cattlemen's Association, said last week.

Finney commented after Ford announced that he was triggering quotas for 1976, as provided by the Meat Import Act of 1964.

The announcement followed an October 8 meeting in Lawton, Okla., between the President and Finney and a group of southwestern cattlemen. For the past several weeks, ANCA and other industry leaders have been emphasizing the need to keep meat imports from exceeding levels permitted under the import law.

"The quotas are particularly important at this time," Finney said, "because record large domestic meat production, along with increasing imports, has resulted in depressed prices in all segments of the cattle industry. Unless there is a significant market upturn, more cattlemen will be forced out of business, threatening future supplies of beef."

The total import quota set by President Ford for 1976 is 1233 million pounds, divided among 13 exporting nations. The base point for quotas is determined by a formula related to domestic production.

The U.S. had previously entered into import restraint agreements with exporting nations for this year. However, imports from some nations have gone over, or have threatened to go over, the restraint levels.

In its latest quarterly estimate of 1976 imports subject to the Import Act, the U.S. Department of Agriculture estimated that the total would be 1250 million pounds (product weight). This is 17 million pounds greater than the so-called "trigger" level; and, under the law, this requires the President to impose quotas. The 1233-million-pound quota level is slightly above the previous restraint total but is at the same level as the '76 trigger point.

It is noteworthy that this is the first time that quotas actually have been imposed by any Administration. In the past, limitations on imports have been achieved only through voluntary restraints.

Poultry declines

HARRISBURG, Pa. - While poultry production in the Commonwealth declined slightly during the week ending October 2, production continued above 1975 levels, according to the Pennsylvania Crop Reporting Service.

Placements of broiler chicks were 1,579,000. The placements were one per cent below the previous week, but 11 per cent higher than the same week a year ago.

Average placements during the past 10 weeks in the commonwealth were 18 per cent above a year earlier.

In the 21 key poultry producing states, placements followed the same trend. Placements were 52,738,000, down 12 per cent from the previous week, but 13 per cent more than the same week in 1975.

Average placements in the 21 key states during the past 10 weeks were 11 per cent above a year ago.

Maryland champion in dairy judging

COLLEGE PARK, Md. - Like their counterparts in horticulture judging, Maryland's senior 4-H dairy cattle judging teams seem to have a penchant for outstanding performance in national competition during even-numbered years.

They did it again this year at the North American Dairy Show which had its annual run during October 2-6 at Columbus, Ohio. Contest day was October 4. There were 34 state teams participating.

This year's 4-H dairy cattle judging team from Maryland squeaked past a strong Ohio team to win the national crown, thus duplicating a similar close 1-2 finish on September 20 for the two state teams during the Pennsylvania All-American Dairy Show at Harrisburg, Pa.

And a pair of vivacious Eastern Shore young women from Kent county led the way for the Maryland team. Lee Hill of Kennedyville was third high individual in last week's national contest, and Pennie Moffett of Chestertown finished in eleventh place.

As a team, the Maryland representatives were first in both oral and total reasons, first in Holstein and Brown Swiss judging, third in Ayrshires, fifth in Guernseys, and twenty-fourth in Jerseys.

Two young men from Montgomery county were also members of the winning Maryland team. They were Richard Morris, 17, of Gaithersburg and G. Barry Schaeffer, 19, of Germantown.

Morris placed fourteenth in over-all individual standings, and Schaeffer was sixteenth—a single point behind his teammate. They were twenty-eighth and twelfth, respectively, in Brown Swiss judging; fifteenth and third, respectively, in the Holstein class, and seventeenth and twelfth, respectively, in oral reasons.

In other classes, Morris placed eleventh in Jersey judging and sixteenth in total reasons.

All told, Maryland teams have now won the national 4-H dairy cattle judging championship 22 times—far more than any other state.

Farm population continues decline

WASHINGTON, D.C. - The U.S. farm population in 1975 declined 400,000 from 1974 to about 8.9 million people, the Bureau of the Census, U.S. Department of Commerce, and the U.S. Department of Agriculture reported last week.

The rate of farm population decline since 1970 has averaged 1.8 per cent annually, much lower than the annual rate of 4.8 per cent experienced from 1960 to 1970, according to Census and USDA's Economic Research Service.

There were 611,000 blacks living on farms in 1975; their number continues to drop sharply. The average annual rate of loss for the 1970-75 period was 8.6 per cent for blacks and 1.2 per cent for whites.

Between 1970 and 1975 the number of farm children declined by one-fourth. There was an increase in the proportion of young adults 20 to 34 years old living on farms. There was no significant change in the proportion of farm teenagers or of older adults.

Agricultural employment among farm residents continues to drop. In 1975, 52 per cent of the 4.1 million employed persons living on farms were engaged primarily in agriculture, compared to 55 per cent in 1970. Nonagricultural employment was more prevalent among farm women than farm men.

The Census-Agriculture report also includes data on farm family type and size, fertility rates, and income.

Single free copies of "Farm Population of the United States: 1975," Current Population Reports, Farm Population Series Census-ERS, P-27, No. 47, are available from Publications Services, Rm. 0054-S, Economic Research Service, U.S. Department of Agriculture, Washington, D.C. 20250. All air-cooled engines are NOT created equal

It's easier to call an engine "heavy duty" than it is to build it that way Many carburated "heavy duty" industrial engines simply don't deserve the title They consume expensive fuel at an alarming rate, they are prone to break down or overheat and their life expectancy is measured in hundreds of hours If any engine in the world qualifies as heavy duty, it's Deutz Deutz engines are often chosen to power equipment with unit price tags over half a million dollars—that's heavy duty

When it comes to cooling efficiency, the Deutz precision-engineered axial-flow cooling air blowers have no equal This direct approach to cooling (without coolants, additives, cavitation) means our engines need only about 60% of the air volume liquid-cooled engines require Combustion efficiency is greatly improved by higher head temperatures and engine life is extended by cooler oil temperatures

If you think air-cooled engines are prone to overheat, talk to Deutz users in the scorching heat of the Imperial or San Joaquin valleys There, Deutz engines deliver more than 20,000 hours of trouble-free service before a major overhaul

There are lots of things that separate Deutz engines from water-cooled and other air-cooled engines Things like blower design, big lube oil coolers, oil-cooled pistons, special alloy cylinder heads, a research and development team of more than 1,000 engineers These are all important advantages Still we say If you can find an engine that uses less fuel than a Deutz—buy it

Farmers at mercy of the weather

By DIETER KRIEG

EDITOR'S NOTE: Often taken for granted, and always important, is the weather. This is the 10th article in a continuing series on the forces which shape our weather and how we are affected by it.

It never seems to matter how many times a farmer has been disappointed or fooled by the weather forecast. A hay crop might have been ruined this week because of a meteorologist's erroneous report, but the farmer will listen to his broadcast again tomorrow anyway. Regardless of how much or how little faith he has in the weatherman's announcements, the farmer realizes that the weather is one of the most important inputs in his program of operation.

Weather and farming tie together like mountains and valleys - you can't have one without the other. And in tilling the soil and raising his crops, the farmer often pays attention to weather patterns while deciding how to manage a field or crop.

Take no-till farming, for example. Granted, it's a method designed to conserve fuel and labor. But it also conserves moisture, and some farmers have that idea very much in mind. Furthermore, how a farmer tills his fields will strongly determine how much of his soil might be lost due to winds and heavy rains. Erosion is a "by-product" of the weather.

The weather also determines when a farmer is going to plow - he can't do it when it's either too wet or too dry. The weather determines when fruit blossoms develop, and when (or even if) fruit will form. Temperature controls germination. Winter kill decides next year's harvest. And so the weather's dictatorial powers over the farmer go on and on.

The weather might even influence a dairyman's decision as to how he'll manage his pasture. A long dry spell puts a stress on grazing lands as it is, so the farmer might decide to keep his animals outside on a limited basis.

But unless a severe economic catastrophe is imminent, little is done to "beat the weather." Fortunately for most American agriculturists, they live in a climate zone which allows them to go about their work with a certain amount of certainty that a harvest will be good. Lancaster County and surrounding areas seem to be especially blessed in having good soil and good weather. Hence there's little need to "beat the weather" in the "Garden Spot."

Some areas, however, aren't so lucky, and consequently ways are found to try changing the weather. The Indians had their rain dances in their time, today we have specially equipped airplanes which seed clouds with crystals of silver iodide. In either case rain was and is the goal.

Historical records show how some "rainmakers" lost their heads due to failures. Nowadays the consequences aren't as drastic, but thousands of dollars go down the drain from time to time because of someone failing to produce rain. In severely parched areas, farmers have sometimes joined together and gladly paid for someone to produce rain. But it doesn't always work. The weather itself still has the ultimate control over what's going to happen.

Cloud seeding is not a new development, and neither is it a 'business' which is exclusive to either a private firm or a government agency. Farmers in the Northeast don't hear of it much, but according to U.S. Department of Commerce, there's a lot of cloud seeding going on across the country. In contrast to the number of failures which result in such efforts, there are also instances when heavy downpours result. Such was the case a few years ago when the government sent rainmakers to southern Florida to break a long dry spell. To some observers these sort of consequences have become quite controversial and occasional charges are being made that other downpours - including Hurricane Agnes' rainfall - are manmade. Those sort of insinuations are few, however, and not substantiated by meteorologist.

Besides drought, farmers also occasionally feel the detrimental effects of hail. Here, again, some attempts are being made to lessen destruction. The method involves firing silver iodide shells into the threatening clouds to cause them to release their precipitation prematurely and before large hailstones are formed. The practice has met with considerable success in the Soviet Union and Australia, American scientists report.

But for the most part, attempts to change the weather have taken a back seat to new technologies which work in spite of adverse weather conditions. So American farmers have seen increased use of anything from irrigation pipes to tractor cabs and drainage tile to mulch.

To be continued next week.

Composting not costly

Almost every garden would produce a little better with the addition of organic matter to the soil. The best way to produce suitable organic material for your garden is to start a compost pile.

Locate the compost pile where it may be screened by a building, or some plant growth. As materials become available, put them in layers on the ground, says Donald B. Lacey, Extension specialist in home horticulture at Cook College, Rutgers University.

Keep the top of the pile lower in the middle than it is on the sides. This allows rain water to collect and stay in the pile.

Apply a layer of animal manure (if you can get it) and chemical fertilizer from time to time. Spread about 1 pint of garden fertilizer over each 6-inch layer where the compost pile is 10 feet long and 5 feet wide. Scatter some lime over each layer.

During dry periods, add water to the pile. Be sure the compost is thoroughly rotted before you apply it to your garden. The compost will be improved if you turn the pile occasionally, advises Lacey.

Now's a good time to start a compost pile using leaves and grass clippings. By next spring it should be ready to add life and vigor to your garden soil.

Grange married couple named

HARRISBURG - Mr. and Mrs. Richard A. Gallimore, of Apple Way Road, Gettysburg R 3, have been named the 1975-76 young married couple of the Pennsylvania State Grange. The Adams County couple succeeds Mr. and Mrs. James Steele, of Pocopson, Chester County.

The Steeles will compete at the National Grange convention in Atlantic City Nov. 8-15 for the national young married title. The Gallimores will be eligible to compete for the national title at the Grange convention in North Carolina in November 1977.

The Gallimores are members of Biglerville Grange and of the York-Adams County Pomona Grange. Gallimore, who has been a member of the Grange since 1971, is master of the Biglerville Grange. His wife, the former Wanda L. McFeaters, who has been a Granger since 1959, is serving as lecturer. They also serve as co-chairmen of the youth and young married couples committee of the Biglerville Grange. Previously, Mrs. Gallimore had served on the State Grange youth committee.

In addition to their Grange work, they teach a weekly boy's class at the Memorial Baptist Church in Gettysburg.

The Gallimores have two children, Rick, who is six years old, and Regina Sue, three.

What's New

FANS

Butler Manufacturing Company has added a new series of centrifugal fans to its grain conditioning product line. The increased air flow provided by centrifugal fans allows the customers to select larger bin sizes, deeper grain depths and a greater variety of grains, according to the manufacturer. The fans are designed to operate at a slower speed, producing less noise and assuring broader use in sound-sensitive areas. Three sizes are offered in Butler's centrifugal fan lineup.

Dairying in Germany:

Two lifestyles at the same time

EDITOR'S NOTE: This is the second of two parts describing life on the farm in Germany. The information is based on observations made by the author while visiting the area in 1974.

KLEMPAU, West Germany - Finding a wooden home or even a wooden barn in Germany would be as unusual as finding a barn in the United States which is built of marble. The Germans use bricks the way Americans use two-by-fours. The rural setting of farms, as we know them here, are absent. It's life on the farm and life in town all at the same time.

Since cows, implements, feedstuffs, and even hogs and chickens share the same building with the farm family, one would think it would result in an unpleasant situation, but neither I nor my wife found that to be true. Evidently the builders of a century or more ago found ways to keep the noise and odors out of the living quarters. This type of construction was brought about by severe winters.

An American farmer visiting this area should not be surprised to find only one breed of dairy cattle. After all, this is the original home of the black-and-whites, and they received their name from this province, Holstein.

Different trends in breeding, due to marketing and management considerations, have left remarkable differences between the European Holsteins and their New World cousins. The European Holsteins are a dual-purpose animal; raised for both milk and meat. They are, therefore, lacking in the features we associate with good dairy character. These shorter-legged, rounder, stockier animals appear to be stronger and less prone to a number of problems we encounter in the U.S. Displaced abomasums, for example, are unheard of. Two veterinarians I talked to could only remember one case between them. The theory presented by one veterinarian was that twisted stomachs are due to nervousness. While I can make no authoritative comment on this thinking, I can definitely point out that cows I saw in Germany are very apathetic to whatever goes on around them.

Dairymen agreed that problems, particularly breeding difficulties, increased as production increased. Most herds averaged 11,000 pounds of milk per cow per year, but 15,000 pound herds were not uncommon. Fat tests generally run higher than what is considered average for American Holstein herds. Holsteins with a higher than 4.5 per cent test are numerous.

American and Canadian bulls have been introduced into Europe in recent years. Surprisingly, matings do not always have favorable results, regardless of how good a pedigree or proof the American sires have. Extensive studies are being made and it is expected that American breeders will eventually have to keep the European dairyman in mind. Performance is by far the major consideration on the farm as well as at the breeding units.

German dairymen like to breed their cows so that calves are born in the spring. A minimum number of cows are milked during the winter. Calves are raised in much the same way as in this country. Milk replacer is a common feed. Sour colostrum has been used for years. And like on many farms in the U.S., calves and heifers are housed wherever there is room for them.

Technological advances are as much a part of European agriculture as they are in the United States. Barn cleaners, pipelines and automatic washers are on almost every farm. As mentioned, earlier, however, there are no regulations concerning their installation, use and maintenance. A pipeline, for example, can be installed with any number of risers to get around doorways, feedbins, hay chutes and so forth. Cylindrical sponges are a part of the cleaning system of one pipeline manufacturer. To clean the line, the dairyman first sends a series of sponges through it. This forces the remaining milk to the receiving bowl in the milk house. The same procedure is followed to remove water from the line at the end of the wash cycle.

Manure handling is very different in Schleswig-Holstein. Every farm has a barn cleaner and a manure stacker. Manure is hauled only a few times a year, and is often a community affair. Farmers get together with loaders and spreaders and spend all day fertilizing their fields.

The lack of barn snow, extremely narrow litter alleys and insufficient light are among the most noticeable differences between the interiors of American and North European dairy barns. American expectations and German methods are strikingly different. Lack of space and architectural styles from centuries ago are primarily responsible for this situation. Litter alleys are only three or four feet wide in some cases and cows are squeezed into stalls so that only half of them can lay down at a time.

An American farmer would think he never left home when he strolls into the German farmer's machinery shed. The names and colors are all familiar. German, French, British and Italian manufacturers are also represented, but most noticeable are the tractors and equipment with American names. Manufactured in Germany according to German specifications, these implements and tractors differ slightly from our own. They are built and equipped to meet strict equipment and highway safety regulations. Tractors must have mud guards on all wheels, rollguards or cabs are standard, and pulled implements are required to have

Tobacco may be future food source says USDA

BELTSVILLE, Md. - A high-quality protein byproduct of tobacco production could become a source of food for humans and for animals, according to a research scientist of the U.S. Department of Agriculture.

Removing this protein from tobacco has the added benefit of eliminating undesirable components from tobacco smoke.

Key to successful removal of protein from leaf tobacco is a process known as homogenized leaf curing (HLC), developed by Dr. T. C. Tso of USDA's Agricultural Research Service at Beltsville, Md. Originally devised as a means of saving labor and improving tobacco quality, HLC also made possible the removal of valuable Fraction-1-Protein, along with other potentially useful compounds. Dr. Tso was assisted in the HLC studies by colleagues at USDA's Tobacco Research Station at Oxford, N.C.; the Agricultural Experiment Station at Lexington, Ky.; and the University of Maryland at Baltimore.

The Fraction-1-Protein from tobacco is pure, tasteless, odorless, and colorless. It is stable and easy to store. Its nutritional value, based on amino acid composition, is comparable to milk and surpasses that of soybeans. It is so constructed that it can be manufactured in a gel-like form that looks much like soybean curd, a staple food in many countries.

A related byproduct known as Fraction-2-Protein is a mixture of many soluble proteins, and has potential for use as both humans and animal food.

Leaf tobacco for smoking contains three groups of compounds, according to Dr. Tso - those that add to smoke quality and tobacco usability, those that add nothing, and those that actually impair smoke quality. It's these last two groups, all wasted during smoking, that provide the potentially useful materials. These include–besides the two protein fractions--alkaloids, lipids, carbohydrates, and phenolics, some of which may be potentially useful in medicines or pesticides. In addition, the removal of these compounds reduces the precursors of some of the undesirable constituents in tobacco smoke.

and has been extensively studied. Scientists have not been able to crystallize the protein from any major crop except tobacco, however; and only then was economically feasible with the advent of the HLC process. Conventional leaf curing procedures do not permit removal of the proteins or other useful compounds.

Dr. Tso estimates conservatively that about 20 to 40 pounds of protein per acre could be obtained as byproducts of tobacco production at current yield levels. Continued technical advances may increase the efficiency of tobacco production with resulting greater yields of the desirable byproducts.

Dr. Tso projects a worldwide yield of 12.5 billion pounds of tobacco by 1985, and 20 billion pounds by 2000, with no increase in acreage. This could provide 750 million pounds of both protein fractions by 1985, and 1.2 billion pounds by the year 2000 - enough to meet the needs of 33 to 63 million people, depending on which of several standards for daily protein consumption are used.

"Despite these potentially high yields," stresses Dr. Tso, "it would not be economically practical to raise tobacco as a main source of protein. A tobacco plant contains 12 to 17 per cent of protein as compared with 42 to 44 per cent for soybeans. But even half that 12 to 17 per cent, which we can get as a byproduct of normal production, can be very significant."

The HLC process involves homogenizing or macerating the leaf material into a slurry form. The extraction and purification of the proteins is fairly simple, much like the crystallization of sugar from sugarcane or sugarbeets. Comparable processing facilities would be needed. The remaining material is then incubated, dehydrated, and reconstituted for use in manufacturing tobacco products.

The energy used to extract protein in the HLC process is more than offset by the savings of 30 to 50 per cent in hand labor and greater usability of tobacco products. Pilot studies are underway by Dr. Tso and scientists in North Carolina, Kentucky, and Maryland, to simplify still further the procedures for removing the proteins.

"We hope that in the year 2000 when the world will have six billion people to feed," states Dr. Tso, "we can make sensible use of the protein fractions and other useful products from tobacco that will otherwise literally be going up in smoke."

automatic braking devices on them in case they become unhitched from the tractor. If you track mud or manure on the road, the good neighborly thing to do is to clean it up. If you don't you'll be asked to do so, and to refuse is to ask for a fine.

Most farmers store and cool their milk in bulk tanks, but a few still have cans. The smaller operations have not found the bulk tank to be a profitable investment for much the same reason why smaller dairymen continue to ship in cans in this country. Farm tank trucks therefore use a different method of picking up milk. Their suction hose is simply placed into the top of the tank or milk can. Milk is metered in much the same way as fuel oil is metered on fuel trucks. The measuring stick is obsolete on German dairy farms.

The average size of a dairy herd in Schleswig-Holstein is about 35 cows. They are predominantly family farms, and as could be expected, they face many of the same difficulties as their American counterparts. Their main complaint is a familiar one: not enough money for the product to meet production expenses. Milk was priced at $7.57 per hundred pounds of 3.5 per cent milk when I visited there in February of 1974. Consolidations of marketing organizations and dairy plants have eliminated the competitive factors which had earlier given the dairy farmers a choice of markets and better profit margins.

ATTENTION DAIRYMEN

Kick off your fall and winter cow feeding program on the "right foot".
Now is the time to adapt your grain ration to your new roughage program in order to reach your winter milk production goal.
- YOU SHOULD -
* Adjust protein to a proper point, but not an excessive amount because protein ingredients are likely to be expensive.
* Provide enough T.D.N. to enable your fresh cows to peak properly and maintain a high level of production.
* Insure adequate fiber intake to maintain good butterfat output.
*Regulate proper Calcium and Phosphorus intake and ratios in your total ration, including roughages, to aid in keeping your herd healthy while maintaining high levels of milk production.
The above mentioned items are all on our Dairy Nutrition Programming check list. In addition, we use Brown & Rea and Red Rose products fortified with Carnation Lab Mix to insure adequate Vitamin and Trace Mineral fortification in a ration "tailor made" for your herd and available roughage and grain.
If you wish to have an analysis and program recommendation made, please call for an appointment.

Optimism guides Guernsey breeder

By DIETER KRIEG

HARRISBURG - Joseph M. Fava of Scenery Hill, Pa. wouldn't be happy with anything but agriculture. He, his father, two uncles, and a brother operate Co-Hill Farms in Washington County and are well known for their Guernseys. The family has been in the milk business since 1926. Included in the operation are processing and retailing facilities as well as two delivery routes.

An alumn of the 4-H program, Fava is still sold on the idea that the nationwide program for youths is a good idea. He has three daughters as members and shares their experiences with interest. Last month he was here at the Farm Show complex to watch his daughter, Alisa Marie, win the grand champion Guernsey title for the second straight year. That made it three years out of four that the 15-year old girl, who has ambitions of becoming a veterinarian, made it to the top spot in the show.

Asked whether or not he might someday switch to black-and-whites, Fava smiled and shook his head. "I have more goals with Guernseys yet," he commented, I wouldn't move to Holsteins. He notes that Guernseys are holding their own and that the breed is progressing. "They're not a dying breed," he affirmed, while noting that there were 227 entered at the show, here. (The Pennsylvania All-American and Pennsylvania Junior Dairy Show).

While having an optimistic outlook for the Guernsey breed and those dairymen who have chosen to work with them, Fava is quick to acknowledge that there are some porblems. "The biggest thorn in our side is the lack of enough proven bulls," he admitted. "But when you come to a show like this, you can see we're making progress."

Aside from raising and milking Guernseys (they have 110 cows), the Favas have also been active in the show ring for a number of years. Fava showed his cattle as a 4-H'er and only dropped his involvement during the years when his three daughters were too young to join. He believes strongly in the merits of the program for several reasons.

Meeting people is one of the primary reasons he and his daughter, Alisa Marie, cited right off the bat. "I also wanted them to join so they'd learn how to lose," he said with a grin. They've lost some, but their average is definitely on the winning side.

Joseph Fava believes in the future of Guernseys and 4-H.

Alisa Marie, an enthusiastic farm girl, unhesitatingly added that "4-H is a lot of fun, and it provides a young person with many opportunities - including getting out of school." In her opinion there is more to be learned in 4-H than in the classroom.

Wheat sales financed

WASHINGTON, D.C. - The U.S. Department of Agriculture recently announced a $100 million line of credit under the Commodity Credit Corporation (CCC) Export Credit Sales Program to finance sales of approximately $40 million of wheat and $60 million of feed grains to Poland.

The grain crop in Poland this year has been sharply reduced by drought and Poland is expected to need about seven million metric tons of imported grain to meet its 1976-77 requirements. Between 3.5 and four million tons ($420 to 475 million) of these imports are expected to come from the United States.

The credit line announced recently will facilitate Polish purchases of U. S. grain. At current prices, the credit line established should cover purchases of about 850,000 tons of U.S. grains by Poland.

Poland has become a major buyer of U. S. grain in recent years. The U.S. exported 2.8 million tons of grain valued at $367 million to Poland in 1975-76.

Credit terms provide for three year financing with equal annual payments of principal plus interest at commercial rates. Irrevocable letters of credit guaranteeing payment will be provided by Bank Handlowy Warszawie and-or other eligible banks.

Sales eligible for financing under this line of credit were made beginning October 4.

Manheim livestock sale results tallied

MANHEIM, Pa. - The beef, lamb, and hog sales at the Manheim Community Farm Show were held in succession last Friday evening. With the exception of the lamb sale, all prices ranged close to last year's with some slightly higher than the usual. Richard Strauss, who owned the champion hog in partnership with his two brothers, Steve and Bob, received $2.80 a pound for his animal. The purchaser was E. W. Martin, Lancaster. Robert Strauss, who showed the reserve champion, received 85 cents a pound for his animal. With a total of $641.20 for the champion and $195.50 for the reserve, the Strauss' trio totaled $836.70 for their first place animals. Hatfield Packing was the buyer for the reserve champion.

At the lamb sale, Christian Herr received 61 cents a pound for his champion animal from Walter M. Dunlap and Sons, Lancaster. Chris' sister, Margaret, received 54 cents for her reserve champion from New Holland Sales Stables.

Tim Good, who had the grand champion of the FFA beef show received $74.50 per hundredweight for his 1415 pound steer. The buyer was Chemgro, East Petersburg,. The reserve champion, who belonged to Steve Hershey, was purchased by the by the Fulton Bank, Manheim, for 51 cents a pound. At 1020 pounds, the total for the sale was $520.20.

Jess Erway, ag instructor at Manheim Central High School, noted that although the sale was forced inside this year, because of rain, the confined quarters did not hamper the selling, but, rather, could have been a plus for the students.

"Our buyers really believe in the students," Erway said, "and we sincerely appreciate the support they lend." Erway also noted that E.M. Murry Associates, and Wilbur Hosler, who auctioneer on alternating years for the sale, ar key factors to the sales' successes, and have been "very, very cooperative over the years."

The sale prices ranged from 38.75 to 59.00, without the champions, for the hogs, 34.50 to 41.00, without the champions, for the sheep, and 40.50-48.10, without the champions, for the beef sale. The averages for the different sales were: for 65 animals in the hog sale, the average price was 42.08 cents per pound with a total of $5,943.07; the lamb sale average was 40.50 cents per pound for 14 lambs with a total off $505.34; and in the beef sale the average was 47.50 cents per pound with a total of $6,841.64 for 14 steers.

Other buyers for the sales were Jacob Geib, Manheim; Gene Wenger, Manheim; J. M. Hoober, Lancaster; Pennway Construction, Manheim; Paul Peters; Dutch Valley; Steve Strauss, Ephrata; Cindy Blaksley, Ephrata; Rick Strauss, Ephrata; Gerald Goldstein, Ephrata; G & G feed Supply, Manheim; Stauffer of Kissel Hill, Burkholders Poultry, Manheim; Glenn Fite; Groff's Home Dressed Meats, Elizabethtown; Steigel Builders, Manheim; Stonebridge Farm, Mt. What's New

ALUMINIZED STEEL GRAIN BIN ROOFS

Grain bin roofs now stand a much better chance of giving added years of maintenance-free service as manufacturers such as Clyton and Lambert Manufacturing Company of Buckner, Kentucky, are offering Armoc aluminized steel as a roofing alternative to galvanized.

Aluminized steel type 2 is sheet steel coated in a bath of commercially pure aluminum. (Galvanized steel is sheet steel coated in a bath of molten zinc.) This resulting aluminum-coated material not only has excellent resistance to atmospheric corrosion, but also reflects up to 80 per cent of incident radiant heat. Hence, it helps eliminate excessive heat and cold fluctuations inside the bin where the most consistent temperatures make for safer grain storage.

Because they have the strength of steel, these grain bin roofs resist damage, stay tight and rigid, and provide high load-carrying capabilities.

New Smoke Detector

Revere Chemical Corporation recently introduced a highly advanced fire and smoke detector alarm system designed for barns, stables and home use.

This life-saving device is on constant guard 24 hours a day. The moment the level of lethal smoke is detected in the air by the photoelectric cell inside the unit, the alarm sounds to warn you of the danger.

For maximum efficiency, this warning device should be installed six to 12 inches from the ceiling in areas where smoke from fires would most likely collect and be immediately detected.

For further information, write or call Revere Chemical Corporation 30875 Carter Street Solon, Ohio 44139.

A 1976 insight: farming in the third century

Editor's note: The following is an article based on special material from Donald Paarlberg, director of economics, USDA.

After nearly a year of looking back over at 1st 200 years of our American history, try now to look ahead to what the next century or two might bring.

What farmers in 1776, drawing upon a century and a half of colonial experience, could have in his wildest fancies imagined the world of the 20th century farmer?

For one thing, he would have been too preoccupied with the circumstances of his day to see the underlying trends that would produce the agriculture of the 1900's He was in the midst of a war for independence that would last six long years.

Taming wilderness

Then, too, there was a wilderness spanning a continent to be brought under cultivation. It was without roads, schools, hospital, or even the most basic amenities of life. Judging from the technology of his time, the early American farmer would have expected to wrest new farms from this wilderness by his own muscle with only hand tools to help. Farm machines were virtually unknown. He lacked even horsepower.

History tells how the American farmer survived and prospered, using methods he did not foresee to overcome obstacles he could not anticipate. He transformed a wilderness into an agricultural plant of unparalleled efficiency. But, paradoxically, his problems today seem no less formidable than those of 1776.

New Problems

They are different problems, of couse; pollution of the environment, threatened shortages of energy and raw materials, a burgeoning world population pressing on food supplies, the frenetic pace of technological change. In additon, we are warned of new ice ages to come, or of encroaching deserts. And always there is the underlying fear of nuclear holocaust.

Undoubtedly our view of the future also is powerfully influenced by present circumstances, some of them undoubtedly transitory. Although we have vastly greater information resources to draw on, the future will yield its secrets no more willingly than in the past.

Fear of failure

But fear of failure should not deter us. Forecasting is a necessary part of the business of living. Our plans and the things we do to realize them assume that the consequences of our efforts are predictable, even while acknowledging that our foresight is less reliable than our hindsight. The bad guess is a part of the game.

Let us begin on the side of the optimists. Scientists tell us that the world probably is some four billion years old, that human beings have been on the earth for perhaps five million years, and that agriculture began about 10,000 years ago. So, it seems reasonable to project that during the next 200 years, hardly an eyeblink in the larger context of time, the world will neither freeze nor fry nor choke nor starve nor blow itself up.

Reasonalbe humans

Let us make the further assumption that the human race is essentially reasonable and is likely to stop an adverse trend somewhere short of ultimate disaster.

What do knowledgeable people think agriculture will be like 200 years from now? Several opinions were sought.

In most cases the thoughts expressed are in technological terms. What kind of farm machinery? Will we be taking our food in the form of concentrated pills? Will we all be computerized? Will we have achieved artificial photosynthesis?

A new age

This orientation reveals the technological bent of our age. But 200 years is long enough for a new age to emerge. Will technology continue to be our major preoccupation? Will it be in some degree replaced by concern for the aesthetic and the spiritual? For many years now, we have moved away from the individual and toward group action. Will this continue, or has this trend run its course? Will the present institutional arrangement continue for the farm and the non-farm sectors, or will there be change?

Bane or benefactor

Science and technology will no doubt remain dominant in agriculture for many years to come. But even now the previous unquestioned acceptance of science and technology as the benefactor of the human race is being challenged. Science and technology will increasingly be asked to show broad-scale benefits to the human race. The wonders and marvels of new knowledge and of new

Professor recognized for work

ROSEMONT, Ill. - Dairy Research Inc. (DRINC) recently presented its sixth annual award to Dr. Robert T. Marshall, professor of food science and nutrition at the University of Missouri. The presentation, made during the American Dairy Science Association's (ADSA) annual meeting in North Carolina State University's McKimmon Center, was for outstanding scientific contributions to the dairy industry.

Award candidates must have five years in basic research on milk, milk components and-or milk products, the results of which are applicable to the solution of problems in the dairy industry. The winner, chosen by ADSA, receives a plaque and a $1000 check.

Dr. Marshall has established himself as a highly competent researcher in areas of dairy microbiology, dairy plant automation and cleaning, and mastitis control.

Recognizing the rapid mid-1960's trend to automated processing and cleaning in the dairy industry, he directed a major research effort to establish practical and reliable solutions to problems in this area. His work resulted in improved control of dairy plant processing operations through automation, improved cleaning of milk handling equipment, control of wastes and improved efficiencies of energy and detergent utilization.

When major innovations were made in the distribution pattern for dairy products, Dr. Marshall and his fellow researchers intensified their research efforts to obtain basic knowledge on the behavior of psychrotrophic microorganisms and their enzymes that were largely responsible for spoilage of refrigerated milk products. The knowledge gained from his work has been well documented in publications and papers.

The DRINC award recipient has served on key committees for ADSA and other organizations, and made presentations at state and national dairy industry conferences. He's also earned honors from several professional associations and councils. Last year he received ADSA's outstanding teaching award.

Dr. Marshall obtained all his degrees from the University of Missouri.

DRINC is the product and process research and development arm of the United Dairy Industry Association, an organization dedicated to increasing the sale of U.S. produced dairy products through its total promotion effort.

This includes the sales promotion and advertising programs of American Dairy Association and the nutrition research and nutrition education programs of National Dairy Council.

methods, formerly a sufficient justification, will not suffice. We may conclude, with the Book of Ecclesiastes, that the pursuit of material ends is vanity and a striving after wind. We are likely to make better use of our technological competence in the years ahead, and strike a better balance between things material and things of the heart, the mind, and the spirit.

But science and technology will still be important. What changes might we see?

Wrong side up

The plow, which was the symbol of agriculture during the firs 200 years of our country's existence, will gradually be retired. We will rediscover the wisdom of the Indian, who commented the first time he saw a plowed field:-"Wrong side up."

The wind and water erosion caused by the plow is incalculable. We will learn to grow crops using minimum tillage. We will learn to control weeds with chemicals tht are biodegradable. We will use various kinds of mulches. We probably will have large machines moving over the land, performing agricultural tasks. But these machines will not be pulling hugh gangs of plows. What is left of our soil we will try to keep in place rather than sending it flying through the air and drifting down the river.

Possible breakthroughs

What technological breakthroughs might occur in agriculture during the next two centuries? Here we can do no more than surmise that some of the presently hoped-for advanced will in fact occur. Some say that trying for a scientific breakthrough is like drilling for oil--you never know whether you are five feet from a million dollars or a million feet from $5. Here are some great things that might happen:

Upgrading the protein content of the cereal grains and other crops.

Hybridizing of additional crops, including wide crosses like triticale.

The learning of soil management to permit the use for agriculture of the fragile soils of the tropical rain forest.

Biological rather than chemical control of harmful insects and diseases.

Killing Flies

Control of the tsetse fly, the vector of sleeping sickness in Africa, thereby opening up vast areas for agricultural use.

Successful long-range weather prediction and modification.

The use of satellites for worldwide crop reporting.

Extension of the principle of nitrogen fixation to new groups of plants, in addition to legumes, thus cutting down the need for commercial fertilizer.

The desalination of sea water, permitting human habitation and agricultural production in lands now unused.

Conquest of the fuel problem, probably by the use of nuclear energy.

Greater environmental control for both plants and animals, providing more economical production and higher, more standardized quality.

Plant protein

Advances in food technology, particularly the modification of plant protein so as to provide meat-like foods to the many millions who cannot afford those from animals.

The use of microbial action on various feedstocks (such as organic wastes or fossil fuels) for the direct production for feed and food.

Systems of distribution that will minimize the twin problems of overeating and poverty-related malnutrition.

Improved understanding of relationships, so that the computers will give us more sense and less nonsense.

Most important of all, advances in family planning and in greater public acceptance of the replacement-sized family so that mankind might move out from under the Malthusian shadow.

Poetry of agriculture

How many of these things might in fact occur, we cannot now know. But of one thing we can be sure--whatever may be the technical developments in agriculture, its poetry will continue. The wonders of life, growth, and death, the cycle of the seasons, the marvels of continuous creation so clearly manifested in agriculture--these will still be with us. In fact, it might be said that these are the most enduring things about agriculture, and that the subject matter of the poet permits him to be the best prognosticator of all.

What about the institutional arrangements within which crops and livestock will be produced?

Loss of uniqueness

For one thing, agriculture will lose its uniqueness. The farm-nonfarm delineation, which was basic to an understanding of economic, social, and political events, will become blurred. Delineating between farm and nonfarm will have little more relevance than, say, dividing the present economy into businessmen and nonbusinessmen.

In fact, it will be difficult to tell what is a farm and what is not. Farm production will be merged in an integrated fashion with the acquisition of input items and with the processing, transporting, financing, merchandising, and consumption of the product.

Vanishing family farms

A mixed farming system will emerge. There will be large-scale integrated units, the forerunners of which we already see in the West and South. The family farmer, already under considerable strain, will slowly and reluctantly give up his historic role of supplying all the factors of production: land, capital, and management.

The production of crops and livestock will require farms so large--so much land, so much capital, and so much managerial skill--that a single person will be unlikely to supply them all.

In commercial agriculture, the nearest thing to the family farmer will be a farm operator who lives on the land with his family, rents his farm, borrows his money, and hires his labor. He will make his own decisions on how he combines these inputs, contracting for both his input items and his output of product.

Part-time farms

Besides the farms that produce most of the crops and livestock ther will be part-time farms, combining the production of food and off-farm jobs with rural living.

For the first 200 years as a nation we flocked to the city. For the next 200 years we probably will look toward the country as a place to live. Its warmer personal relationships, cleaner air and water, greater privacy, and greater social stability will look better and better as the years pass. We will be able, in rural areas, to provide most of the social services and utilities that used to be found only in the cities.

A rose-colored outlook

On balance, this is an optimistic outlook. But even if in general it should in fact be borne out, we could certainly still have problems. It is the nature of the human species to have problems.

Even if all the difficulties that currently are recognized as problems were suddenly solved, a new list would develop within a matter of months.

Time of grief, time of joy

So there will be times of exhilaration during the next 200 years–great feasts and celebrations. And, as the Bible tells u–we will hear of wars and rumors of wars, and there will be earthquakes in diverse places. Thus, problems will be on the agenda during the years ahead, even though by historic comparison or by objective measurement it might appear that the problems would be of modest proportions.

As a final assessment, we turn to the Book of Genesis for this long-term agricultural outlook statement: "While the earth remaineth, seedtime and harvest, and cold and heat, and summer and winter shall not cease." That forecast has been good for about 3,000 years. It seems not overly presumptuous to extend it for 200 more.

Government becomes concerned

Various organizations at the turn of the century were concerned with upgrading rural life, food production, and nutrition, but not until 1908 did the Federal Government get into the act...to the betterment of women. President Theodore Roosevelt appointed the Country Life Commission. The report of the Commission in 1909 discussed women's work on the farm and concluded that "relief to farmwomen must come through a general elevation of country life." Such improvement would give women time to participate in vital affairs of the community.

Few modern conveniences

The role of women in agriculture continued to be a topic of discussion and study. A survey taken about 1912 showed that few farmwomen enjoyed modern conveniences in their homes. Only 57 per cent had oil stoves; 15 per cent had furnaces; 33 per cent, hand-operated washing machines; 10 per cent, washing machines run by engines; and only 11 per cent had drinking water in the house. The survey also found that women were working the fields, doing some of the most back-breaking chores.

Another survey, reported by Secretary David Houston of USDA In 1913, showed that women wanted labor-saving appliances, assistance in home management, and a women's bureau. They complained of isolation and loneliness. Some of their grievances were answered by the Smith-Lever Act of 1914, which for the first time made extension work an official institution.

Farmwomen to the rescue

The entrance of the U.S. into World War I drained manpower from the farm, and once again, women filled the void. They picked cotton, harvested crops, and picked and packed fruit. The Food Production Act of 1917 employed 600 women as emergency extension agents. The next year the number had risen to 1,724 home demonstration workers and 762 boys' and girls' club workers.

1976 insight

Young women from towns and cities joined the Farmettes–a joint venture of USDA and the U.S. Food Administration–who canned and dried food and worked in commercial processing plants.

During the war years, many young women came to Washington, D.C., to work in USDA or the U.S. Food Administration. Generally, they were in low-grade clerical positions. One exception was Mary Pennington, who came to USDA to head the Food Research Lab in 1908.

USDA representative

Later that year, despite protests within the Department over the selection of a woman, she was designated USDA's representative to the first International Congress of Refrigerating Industries in Paris. In 1919, she left the Department to enter private industry, at twice her Government salary.

Dr. Pennington's work in sanitation and refrigeration led to revolutionary changes in the egg and poultry industries. A member of 12 professional organizations and 3 honorary societies, she was the first woman accepted in the American Society of Refrigerating Engineers. In 1940, she received the Francis Garvan gold medal, awarded to American women for distinguished service in chemistry.

A USDA first. Secretary Henry C. Wallace was instrumental in recruiting the first and only woman to head a major USDA research agency. In 1922 he announced his intention to expand the Department to include a new bureau of home economics to be led by a woman. Louise Stanley, head of the Home Economics Division of the University of Missouri, was selected. At USDA, she directed important studies in nutrition, clothing, and housing.

Probably the most significant of these efforts was a landmark nutrition study conducted in the late 1920's and early 1930's to determine scientifically what makes up a well-balanced diet for humans at different levels of expenditure.

More than a million strong

During 1943-45 more than a million women were recruited for seasonal work, and over 32,000 for the year round, primarily on dairy and poultry farms. Women also worked in food processing plants–canning, freezing, and drying foods.

The major changes in American agriculture during World War II and the postwar years greatly affected the life of farmwomen. Most homes now have running water, central heating, electricity, telephone, radio, television, freezers, and other labor-saving appliances. Because of the trend toward large-scale, specialized farming, fewer farms keep a large garden, a cow for butter and milk, and a few chickens for eggs. Thus, these chores have been largely eliminated from the farmwoman's daily routine.

Nonetheless, farmwomen still do their share. Besides housework, they can and freeze foods, sometimes run tractors during planting and harvest time, and often do the paperwork that keeps the farm running.

Housing program announced by USDA

WASHINGTON, D.C. - A two-year demonstration program to find better ways of providing community development and housing assistance for "hard-to-reach," low-income persons in rural areas is being sponsored by the U.S. Department of Agriculture and the U.S. Department of Housing and Urban Development.

Three to six state governments will be selected jointly by USDA nad HUD to receive grants to develop the systems for delivering federal and other resources. USDA's Farmers Home Administration will provide up to $35 million for rural housing loans and up to $5 million in community program funds for the demonstration. HUD will provide $2.5 million for community development block grants and $500,000 to pay administrative costs.

Technical assistance will be available for application processing, planning, and financing, and to help applicants obtain assistance under other federal programs that can be used to complement the demonstration projects.

Rural areas generally are defined as nonmetropolitan, with less than 50,000 population. Some federal programs included in the demonstration effort are subject to specific population limitations which are less than 50,000. "Hard-to-reach" individuals or families include those who are unaware of, or have had no opportunity or capability of applying for, assistance offered under federal programs. The elderly and handicapped are included.

More information and applications are available from: Howard Ball, Director, Office of Policy Planning, Department of Housing and Urban Development, Room 7158, Washginton, D.C., 20410, or Administrator, Rural Development Service, U.S. Department of Agriculture, Washington, D.C., 20250.

Super potatoes feasible

Super potatoes with higher protein content are expected to be ready for commercial growers in the next three to five years.

Breeding stock from South America, where potatoes were first known, is currently being used by Minnesota plant scientists to develop the new varieties.

While the average tuber has a protein content of about five per cent, scientists hope to double this amount through selective breeding processes.

At the same time they're seeking to develop plants that will be adaptable to this climate with yields comparable to varieties now grown.

By crossing parent potatoes whose protein content is about 20 per cent with a variety adapted to Minnesota environments, scientists have already produced potatoes with about 10 per cent protein. Commonly grown varieties now have only about 5 per cent protein.

Potatoes already rank second to soybeans in protein yield per acre.

Since potatoes' total yield per acre is so much higher, however, scientists say doubling their protein content would give them a higher protein yield per acre than that of soybeans.

The development promises to provide better nutrition not only in fresh potatoes but also in processed forms like potato flakes or chips.

What's New

Chisel Mulcher Attachment

In keeping with changing row crop farming methods, Massey Ferguson has introduced a new chisel mulcher attachment for the MF 129 pull-type rigid chisel plow. The attachment is designed for use in mulch tillage crop residue. Research has shown large and consistent reduction in soil and water losses from mulch tillage practices. The MF chisel mulcher attachment consists of a gang of 20-inch diameter disc coulters on 10-5-8 inch spacing which are placed ahead of the chisel shanks of the MF 129 chisel plow. The coulters cut crop residue into pieces that are easily turned under, blended and partially covered by the following wide spaced chisel shanks. This process speeds decomposition of residue.

With this attachment, stubble can usually be worked earlier after harvest without chopping or shredding. The field is left "ridged" and non-compacted for greatest protection against soil erosion.

The attachment is added to the MF 129 chisel plow by removing the front rank of shanks and changing shank spacing to 15 3-8 inches. Depth of disc gangs is adjustable.

Rural employment registry founded to assist students

CRAFTSBURY COMMON, Vt. - Two current goals of American students - to get a job and to live in a rural area - have been combined in a new program sponsored by a non-profit educational program in Vermont specifically to assist students in their quest.

The Rural Employment Registry, which was established this Spring, invites high school and college students, skilled and unskilled, to register without charge for jobs in farming, ranching, horse husbandry, forestry, wildlife management, or creation. The Registry is then made available through mailings to over 35,000 potential rural employers across the land. Any employer having a position available in a rural area is also invited to list without charge.

The Rural Employment Registry is operated by The Rural Resources Studies Center from its base in this northern Vermont hill-town.

Qualifications for entry into the program include a college-entrance academic ability, a sincere interest in rural activities, and a desire to develop special outdoor work skills. The list of jobs secured by its graduates is colorfully varied and includes placement on farms, ranches, national parks, logging operations, research forests, and horse operations of all kinds. Many students go on to enroll in liberal arts colleges, but some have changed their career goals to agriculture, forestry, or wildlife management as a result of the experience. Foundations provide a limited amount of scholarship aid.

Because of its dual emphasis on academic study and physical work, The Grassroots Project has received national recognition as an educational innovation of some importance. The Christian Science Monitor in a feature article says students are drawn to Grassroots by "two time-proven ideas: that man is part of nature and that hard work is good." Most come upon the recommendation of their guidance counselors or friends who are former students. Its success is such that after just two years it is the largest program of its kind in the nation.
